 The way to live long must be, to use our bodies so as is most agreeable to the rules of temperance. Ray on Creation.

4. To live emphatically; to be in a state of happiness.
 What greater curse could envious fortune give,
 Than just to die when I began to live. Dryden.

5. To

To be exempt from death, temporal or spiritual.
 My statutes and judgments, if a man do, he shall live in them. Lev. xviii. 5.
 He died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. 1 Thes. v. 10.

6. To remain undestroyed.
 It was a miraculous providence that could make a vessel, so ill manned, live upon sea; that kept it from being dashed against the hills, or overwhelmed in the deeps. Burnet.

Mark how the shifting winds from west arise,
 And what collected night involves the skies!
 Nor can our shaken vessels live at sea,
 Much less against the tempest force their way. Dryden.

7. To continue; not to be lost.
 Mens evil manners live in brass, their virtues
 We write in water. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 Sounds which address the ear are lost and die
 In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye Lives long upon the mind; the faithful light Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

The tomb with many arms and trophies grace
 There high in air memorial of my name
 Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

8. To converse; to cohabit.
 The shepherd swains shall dance and sing,
 For thy delight each May morning.
 If these delights thy mind may move,
 Then live with me, and be my love. Shakespeare.

9. To feed.
 Those animals that live upon other animals have their flesh more alkalescent than those that live upon vegetables. Arbut.

10. To maintain one's self.
 A most notorious thief; lived all his life-time of spoils and robberies. Spenser.
 They which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple. 1 Cor. ix. 13.

His treasure and goods were all seized upon, and a small portion thereof appointed for his poor wife to live upon. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

The number of soldiers can never be great in proportion to that of people, no more than the number of those that are idle in a country, to that of those who live by labour.

He had been most of his time in good service, and had something to live on now he was old. Temple.

11. To be in a state of motion or vegetation.
 In a spacious cave of living stone,
 The tyrant Æolus, from his airy throne,
 With pow'r imperial curbs the struggling winds. Dryden.

Cool groves and living lakes
 Give after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden.

12. To be unextinguished.
 Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw:
 These gifts the greedy flames to dust devour,
 Then on the living coals red wine they pour. Dryden.

LIVE, adj. [from alive.]
 1. Quick; not dead.

If one man's ox hurt another that he die, they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money. Exod. xxi. 35.
 2. Active; not extinguished.

A louder found was produced by the impetuous eruptions of the halituous flames of the saltpetre upon casting of a live coal upon it. Boyle.

LIVELESS, adv. [from live.] Wanting life; rather lifeless.
 Description cannot suit itself in words,
 To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
 In life so liveless as it shows itself. Shakespeare's Henry V.

LIVELIHOOD, n. f. [It appears to me corrupted from livelode.]
 Support of life; maintenance; means of living.

Ah! luckless babe! born under cruel star,
 And in dead parents' baleful arms bred;
 Full little weenest thou what sorrows are,

That rebellion drove the lady from thence, to find a livelihead out of her own estate. Chaucer's b. viii.

He brings disgrace upon his character, to submit to the picking up of a livelihead in that strolling way of canting and begging. L'Estrange.

It is their profession and livelihead to get their living by those practices, for which they deserve to forfeit their lives. South's Sermons.

They have been as often banished out of most other places; which must very much disperse a people, and oblige them to seek a livelihead where they can find it. Addison's Spect.

Trade employs multitudes of hands, and furnishes the poorest of our fellow subjects with the opportunities of gaining an honest livelihead: the skilful or industrious find their account in it. Addison's Freeholder, N. 42.

LIVELINESS, n. f. [from lively.]
 1. Appearance of life.

That liveliness which the freedom of the pencil makes appear, may seem the living hand of nature. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

 2. Vivacity; sprightliness.

Extravagant young fellows, that have liveliness and spirit, come sometimes to be set right, and to make able and great men; but tame and low spirits very seldom attain to any thing. Locke on Education.

LIVELODE, n. f. [live and lode, from lead; the means of leading life.] Maintenance; support; livelihood.
 She gave like blessing to each creature,
 As well of worldly livelode as of life. Hubberd.

That there might be no difference nor strife.
 LIVELONG, adj. [live and long.] Tedious; long in passing.
 Many a time, and oft,
 Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
 Your infants in your arms; and there have sat
 The livelong day, with patient expectation
 To see great Pompey pass. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The obscur'd bird clamour'd the livelong night. Shakespeare.
 Young and old come forth to play,
 On a sun-shine holiday,
 Till the livelong day-light fail. Milton.

Seek for pleasure to destroy
 The sorrows of this livelong night. Prior.
 How could the fit the livelong day,
 Yet never ask us once to play? Swift.

2. Lasting; durable.
 Thou, in our wonder and astonishment,
 Hast built thyself a livelong monument. Milton.

LIVELY, adj. [live and like.]
 1. Brisk; vigorous; vivacious.

But wherefore comes old Manoa in such haste,
 With youthful steps? much livelier than ere while
 He seems; supposing here to find his son,
 Or of him bringing to us some glad news? Milton's Ag.

2. Gay; airy.
 Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
 From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. Representing life.
 Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it in poetry or painting must produce a much greater. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

4. Strong; energetic.
 His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be brightened and stirred up by a particular exercise of those virtues specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South's Sermons.

The colours of the prism are manifestly more full, intense and lively, than those of natural bodies. Newton's Opticks.
 Imprint upon their minds, by proper arguments and reflections, a lively persuasion of the certainty of a future state. Atterbury's Sermons.

LIVELY, adv.
 1. Briskly; vigorously.

They brought their men to the slough, who discharging lively almost close to the face of the enemy, did much amaze them. Hayward.

2. With strong resemblance of life.
 That part of poetry must needs be best, which describes most lively our actions and passions, our virtues and our vices. Dryden's Pref. to his State of Innocence.

LIVER, n. f. [from live.]
 1. One who lives.

Be thy affections undisturb'd and clear,
 Guided to what may great or good appear,
 And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.

2. One who lives in any particular manner with respect to virtue or vice, happiness or misery.

The end of his descent was to gather a church of holy christian livers over the whole world. Hammond's Fund.
 If any loose liver have any goods of his own, the sheriff is to seize thereupon. Spenser on Ireland.

Here are the wants of children, of distracted persons, of sturdy wandering beggars and loose disorderly livers, at one view represented. Atterbury.

3. [From liver, Saxon.] One of the entrails.
 With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come:
 And let my liver rather heat with wine,
 Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shakespeare.

Reason and respect
 Make livers pale, and lustiness dejected. Shakespeare.

LIVERCOLOUR, adj. [live and colour.] Dark red.
 The uppermost stratum is of gravel; then clay of various colours, purple, blue, red, livercolour. Woodward.

LIVERGROWN, adj. [live and grown.] Having a great liver.
 I inquired what other casualties was most like the rickets, and found that livergrown was nearest. Graunt.

LIVERWORT, n. f. [live and wort.] A plant.
 That sort of liverwort which is used to cure the bite of mad dogs, grows on commons, and open heaths, where the grass is shot, on declivities, and on the sides of pits. This spreads spreads on the surface of the ground, and, when in perfection, is of an ash colour; but, as it grows old, it alters, and becomes of a dark colour.

LIVERY. n. f. [from liver, French.]

1. The act of giving or taking possession.

You do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,
Call in his letters patents that he hath
By his attorneys general to sue
His livery, and deny his offered homage.

2. Release from wardship.

Had the two houses first sued out their livery, and once effectually redeemed themselves from the wardship of the tumults, I should then suspect my own judgment.

3. The writ by which possession is obtained.

4. The state of being kept at a certain rate.

What livery is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that it is an allowance of horse meat; as they commonly use the word stabling, as to keep horses at livery; the which word, I guess, is derived of livering or delivering forth their nightly food; so in great houses, the livery is laid to be served up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink: and livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears; so called, I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure: so it is apparent, that, by the word livery, is there meant horse meat, like as by the coigny is understood man's meat. Some say it is derived of coin, for that they used in their coignies not only to take meat but money; but I rather think it is derived of the Irish, the which is a common use amongst landlords of the Irish to have a common depending upon their tenants, who being commonly but tenants at will, they used to take of them what victuals they list; for of victuals they were wont to make a small reckoning.

5. The cloaths given to servants.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears.

Perhaps they are by too much the more loth to forsake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing else, yet the name of scripture, to give it some kind of countenance more than the pretext of livery coats affordeth.

I think, it is our way,

If we will keep in favour with the king,

To be her men, and wear her livery.

Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,

That see I by our faces.

Ev'ry lady cloath'd in white,

And crown'd with oak and laurel ev'ry knight,

Are servants to the leaf, by liveries known

Of innocence.

On others int'rest her gay liv'ry flings,

Int'rest that waves on party-colour'd wings;

Turn'd to the sun the calfs a thousand dyes,

And as the turns the colours fall or rise.

If your dinner miscarries, you were seized by the footmen coming into the kitchen; and to prove it true, throw a ladleful of broth on one or two of their liveries.

5. A particular dress; a garb worn as a token or consequence of any thing.

Of fair Urania, fairer than a green,

Proudly bedeck'd in April's livery.

Mistake me not for my complexion

The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,

To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,

Infect, or worm; those wav'd their limber fans,

For wings, and smallest lineaments exact,

In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride,

With spots of gold and purple, azure, green.

Now came still evening on, and twilight grey

Had in her sober livery all things clad.

LIVERYMAN. n. f. [livery and man.]

1. One who wears a livery; a servant of an inferior kind.

The witnesses made oath, that they had heard some of the liverymen frequently railing at their mistresses.

2. [In London.] A freeman of some standing in a company.

LIVES. n. f. [the plural of life.]

So short is life, that every peasant thrives,

In a farm house, or field, to have three lives.

LIVID. adj. [lividus, Latin; livide, French.] Discoloured, as with a blow; black and blue.

It was a pestilent fever, not seated in the veins or humours, for that there followed no carbuncles, no purple or livid spots, the mafs of the blood not being tainted.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:

O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss!

They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,

Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow.

LIVIDITY. n. f. [lividitas, French; from livid.] Discolouration, as by a blow.

The signs of a tendency to such a state, are darkness or lividity of the countenance.

LIVING. n. f. [from live.]

1. Support; maintenance; fortune on which one lives.

LOA

The Arcadians fought as in unknown place, having no succour but in their hands; the Helots, as in their own place, fighting for their livings, wives, and children.

All they did cast in of their abundance; but the of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.

2. Power of continuing life.

There is no living without trusting some body or other, in some cases.

3. Livelihood.

For ourselves we may a living make.

Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.

Isaac and his wife, now dig for your life,

Or shortly you'll dig for your living.

Actors must represent such things as they are capable to perform, and by which both they and the scribbler may get their living.

3. Benefice of a clergyman.

Some of our ministers having the livings of the country offered unto them, without pains, will, neither for any love of God, nor for all the good they may do, by winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests.

The parson of the parish preaching against adultery, Mrs. Bull told her husband, that they would join to have him turned out of his living for using personal reflections.

LIVINGLY. adv. [from living.] In the living state.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, or fear any outward pollution, while temper pollutes themselves.

LIVRE. n. f. [French.] The sum by which the French reckon their money, equal nearly to our shilling.

LIXIVIAL. adj. [from lixivium, Latin.]

1. Impregnated with salts like a lixivium.

The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vitiated, were a yellowish colour of the skin, and a lixivial urine.

2. Obtained by lixivium.

Helmont conjectured, that lixivial salts do not pre-exist in their alkalizate form.

LIXIVIATE. adj. [lixivieux, French; from lixivium.] Making a lixivium.

In these the salt and lixivated serosity, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and the bladder.

Lixivate salts, to which pot ashes belong, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, dispose them to part readily with their tincture.

LIXIVIUM. n. f. [Lat.] Lye; water impregnated with salt of whatsoever kind; a liquor which has the power of extraction.

I made a lixivium of fair water and salt of wormwood, and having frozen it with snow and salt, I could not discern any thing more like to wormwood than to several other plants.

LIZARD. n. f. [lizardus, French; lacertus, Latin.] An animal resembling a serpent, with legs added to it.

There are several sorts of lizards; some in Arabia of a cubit long. In America they eat lizards; it is very probable likewise that they were eaten sometimes in Arabia and Judaea, since Moses ranks them among the unclean creatures.

Thou'rt like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,

Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,

As venomous toads, or lizards dreadful stings.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,

Lizard's leg, and owl's wing.

LIZARDITAL. n. f. A plant.

LIZARDSTONE. n. f. [lizard and stone.] A kind of stone.

L.L.D. n. f. [legum doctor.] A doctor of the canon and civil laws.

Lo. interject. [la, Saxon.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recall the attention generally to some object of sight; sometimes to something heard, but not properly; often to something to be understood.

Lo! within a ken our army lies.

Now must the world point at poor Catharine,

And say, lo! there is mad Petrucchio's wife.

Lo! I have a weapon,

A better never did itself sustain

Upon a soldier's thigh.

Thou did'st utter,

I am yours for ever.

Why lo you now, I've spoke to the purpose twice.

For lo! he sung the world's stupenduous birth.

Lo! heav'n and earth combine

To blast our bold design.

LOACH. n. f. [loche, French.]

The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the sharpest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is suitable to that length: he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattels like a barbel: he has two fins at his sides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots:

LOA

his mouth, barbel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gesser, and other learned physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and to be fitted for with a very small worm, at the bottom, for he very seldom or never rises above the gravel.

LOAD. n. f. [blase, Saxon.]

1. A burthen; a freight; lading.

Then on his back he laid the precious load,

And fought his wonted shelter.

2. Any thing that depresses.

How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant.

3. As much drink as one can bear.

There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle.

TO LOAD. v. a. [blaban, Saxon.]

1. To burden; to freight.

At last, laden with honour's spoils,

Returns the good Andronicus to Rome.

Your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the beast.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.

He that makes no reflexions on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others.

3. To charge a gun.

A mariner having discharged his gun, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.

Thy dreadful vow, laden with death, still sounds

In my stunn'd ears.

LOAD. n. f. [more properly lade, as it was anciently written from laean, Saxon, to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay couched at first in certain strakes amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air.

Their manner of working in the load mines, is to follow the lead as it lieth.

LOADER. n. f. [from load.] He who loads.

LOADSMAN. n. f. [lade and man.] He who leads the way; a pilot.

LOADSTAR. n. f. [more properly as it is in Maundeville, loadstar, from laean, to lead.] The polestar; the cynosure; the leading or guiding star.

She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing of mine eyes; she the overthrow of my desires, and yet the recompence of my overthrow.

My Helice, the loadstar of my life.

O happy fair!

Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air;

More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear

When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.

That clear majesty

Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth,

Lodestone to hearts, and loadstar to all eyes.

LOADSTONE. n. f. [properly loadstone or leadingstone. See LOADSTAR.] The magnet; the stone on which the mariners compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.

The loadstone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron-grey where fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour: it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of attracting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in most other places where there are mines of that metal.

The use of the loadstone was kept as secret as any of the other mysteries of the art.

LOAF. n. f. [from laaf or lap, Saxon.]

1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Easy it is

Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, we know.

The bread and bread corn in the town sufficed not for six days: hereupon the soldiers entered into proportion; and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf a day.

With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness.

2. Any mass into which a body is wrought.

Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may bottle it with a piece of loaf sugar in each bottle.

LOAM. n. f. [lim, laam, Saxon; limus, Latin; from limen, a fen, Junius.] Fat, unctuous, tenacious, earth; marl, the purest treasure

LOA

Is spotless reputation; that away,

Men are but gilded loam or painted clay.

Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam might they not stop a beer barrel?

TO LOAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear with loam, marl, or clay; to clay.

The joist ends, and girders which be in the walls, must be loamed all over, to preserve them from the corroding of the mortar.

LO'AMY. adj. [from loam.] Marly.

The mellow earth is the best, between the two extremes of clay and sand, especially if it be not loamy and binding.

Auricula seedlings best like a loamy sand, or light moist earth; yet rich and shaded.

LOAN. n. f. [blæn, Saxon.] Any thing lent; any thing given to another, on condition of return or repayment.

The better such ancient revenues shall be answered and paid, the less need her majesty ask subsidies, fifteens, and loans.

You're on the fret,

Because, in so debauch'd and vile an age,

Thy friend and old acquaintance dares disown

The gold you lent him, and forswear the loan.

LOATH. adj. [lað, Saxon.] Unwilling; disliking; not ready; not inclined.

These fresh and delightful brooks, how slowly they slide away, as loth to leave the company of so many things united in perfection.

With lofty eyes, half loth to look so low,

She thanked them in her disdainful wife,

Ne other grace vouchsafed them to show

Of princely worth.

When he heard her answers loth, he knew

Some secret sorrow did her heart constrain.

To speak so indirectly, I am loth;

I'd say the truth; but to accuse him so,

That is your part.

Long doth she stay, as loth to leave the land,

From whose soft side she first did issue make,

She tastes all places, turns to ev'ry hand,

Her flow'ry banks unwilling to forsake.

Then wilt thou not be loth

To leave this paradise, but shalt possess

A paradise within thee, happier far!

To pardon willing, and to punish loth;

You strike with one hand, but you heal with both:

Lifting up all that prostrate lie, you grieve

You cannot make the dead again to live.

When Aeneas is forced to kill Lausus, the poet shews him compassionate, and is loth to destroy such a master-piece of nature.

As some faint pilgrim standing on the shore,

First views the torrent he would venture o'er;

And then his inn upon the farther ground,

Loth to wade through, and lother to go round:

Then dipping in his staff does trial make

How deep it is; and, fighting, pulls it back.

I know you shy to be oblig'd;

And still more loath to be oblig'd by me.

TO LOATHE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hate; to look on with abhorrence.

Parthenia had learned both liking and mistaking, loving and loathing.

They with their filthiness

Polluted this same gentle soil long time,

That their own mother loath'd their beastliness.

The fish in the river shall die, and the river stink; and the Egyptians shall loath to drink of the water.

How

 Whose base effect, through cowardly distrust
 Of his weak wings, dare not to heaven flye. Spenser.
Lo'ATHINGLY. adv. [from loath.] In a fastidious manner.
Lo'ATHLY. adj. [from loath.] Hateful; abhorred; exciting hatred.
 An huge great dragon, horrible in fight,
 Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,
 With murd'rous ravin. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakefp.
 Sour-ey'd disdain, and discord shall bestow
 The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
 That you shall hate it. Shakefpere's Tempest.
Lo'ATHLY. adv. [from loath.] Unwillingly; without liking or inclination.
 The upper streams make such haste to have their part of embracing, that the nether, though loathly, must needs give place unto them. Sidney.
Lothly opposite I stood
 To his unnatural purpose. Shakefpere's King Lear.
 This shews that you from nature lothly stray,
 That suffer not an artificial day. Donne.
Lo'ATHNESS. n. f. [from loath.] Unwillingness.
 The fair soul herself
 Weigh'd between loathness and obedience,
 Which end the beam should bow. Shakefp. Tempest.
 Pray you, look not fad,
 Nor make replies of loathness. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 Should we be taking leave,
 As long a term as yet we have to live,
 The loathness to depart would grow. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
 After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and loathness to speak amongst them; and immediately one of the weakest fell down in a swoon. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Lo'ATHSOME. adj. [from loath.]
 1. Abhorred; detestable.
 The fresh young fly
 Did much disdain to subject his desire
 To loathsomely sloth, or hours in ease to waste. Spenser.
 While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
 To loathsomely sickness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
 If we consider man in such a loathsomely and provoking condition, was it not love enough that he was permitted to enjoy a being. South's Sermons.
 2. Causing satiety or fastidiousness.
 The sweetest honey
 Is loathsomely in its own deliciousness,
 And in the taste confounds the appetite. Shakefpere.
Lo'ATHSOMENESS. n. f. [from loathsomely.] Quality of raising hatred.
 The catacombs must have been full of stench and loathsome-ness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches. Addison.
Loaves, plural of loaf.
 Democritus, when he lay a dying, caused loaves of new bread to be opened, and he poured a little wine into them;
 and so kept himself alive with the odour till a feast was past.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 934.
LOB. n. f.
 1. Any one heavy, clumsy, or sluggish.
 Farewell, thou lob of spirits, I'll be gone,
 Our queen and all her elves come here anon. Shakefp.
 2. Lob's pound; a prison. Probably a prison for idlers, or sturdy beggars.
 Crowdero, whom in irons bound,
 Thou basely threw'st into lob's pound. Hadilbras.
 3. A big worm.
 For the trout the dew worm, which some also call the lob worm, and the brandling are the chief. Walton's Angler.
To LOB. v. a. To let fall in a slovenly or lazy manner.
 The horsemen fit like fixed candlesticks,
 And their poor jades
 Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips. Shakefp.
Lo'BBY. n. f. [labbe, German.] An opening before a room.
 His lobbies fill with tendance,
 Rain sacrificial whisp'rings in his ear,
 Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakefp. Tim. of Athens.
 Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers attending him. Watson.
 Try your back stairs, and let the lobby wait,
 A stratagem in war is no deceit. King's Horace.
LOBE. n. f. [lobe, French; λοβος.] A division; a distinct part;
 used commonly for a part of the lungs.

LOC

Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
 To that prodigious mass, for their eternal meal. Dryden.
 Air bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Lo'BSER. n. f. [lobryer, Saxon.] A crustaceous fish.
 Those that cast their shell, are the lobster, the crab, and craw-fish. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 732.
 It happeneth often that a lobster hath the great claw of one side longer than the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Lo'CAL. adj. [local, French; locus, Latin].
 1. Having the properties of place.
 By ascending, after that the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the very local possession of glory, and that to the use of all that are his, even as himself before had witnessed, I go to prepare a place for you. Hooker, b. v.
 A higher flight the vent'rous goddess tries,
 Leaving material worlds, and local skies. Prior.
 2. Relating to place.
 The circumstance of local nearness in them unto us, might haply enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other. Hooker, b. iv.
 Where there is only a local circumstance of worship, the same thing would be worshipped, supposing that circumstance changed. Stillingfleet.
 3. Being in a particular place.
 Dream not of their fight,
 As of a duel, or the local wounds
 Of head, or heel. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xiii.
 How is the change of being sometimes here, sometimes there, made by local motion in vacuum, without a change in the body moved? Digby on Bodies.
Lo'CALITY. n. f. [from local.] Existence in place; relation of place, or distance.
 That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, and that they have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opinioned. Glanville's Scep.
Lo'CALLY. adj. [from local.] With respect to place.
 Whether things, in their natures so divers as body and spirit, which almost in nothing communicate, are not essentially divided, though not locally distant, I leave to the readers. Glanville's Scep.
Lo'CA'TION. n. f. [locatio, Latin.] Situation with respect to place; act of placing; state of being placed.
 To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than that it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location. Locke.
LoCH. n. f. A lake. Scottish.
 A lake or loch, that has no fresh water running into it, will turn into a stinking puddle. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.
LoCK. n. f. [loc, Saxon, in both senses].
 1. An instrument composed of springs and bolts, used to fasten doors or chests.
 No gate so strong, no lock so firm and fast,
 But with that piercing noise flew open quit or braff. F. Qu.
 We have locks to safeguard necessities,
 And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves. Shakefpere.
 As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in locks, in contriving their wards or guards. Moxon.
 2. The part of the gun by which fire is struck.
 A gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges: under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder; a little before the lock, another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder to the further end of the lock. Grew's Musæum.
 3. A hug; a grapple.
 They must be practised in all the locks and gripes of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tugg or grapple, and to close. Milton on Education.
 4. Any inclosure.
 Sergethus, eager with his beak to preß
 Betwixt the rival gally and the rock,
 Shuts up th' unwieldy centaur in the lock. Dryden's En.
 5. A quantity of hair or wool hanging together.
 Well might he perceive the hanging of her hair in locks, some curled, and some forgotten. Sidney.
 A goodly cypress, who bowing her fair head over the water, it seemed the looked into it, and dressed her green locks
 by that running river. Sidney.
 His grizly locks, long grown and unbound,
 Disordered hung about his shoulders round. Fairy Qu.
 The bottom was set against a lock of wool, and the found was quite deaded. Bacon.
 They nourish only a lock of hair on the crown of their heads. Sandys's Travels.
 A lock of hair will draw more than a cable rope. Grew.
 Behold the locks that are grown white
 Beneath a helmet in your father's battels. Addison's Cato.
 Two locks graceful hung behind
 In equal curls, and well-conspir'd, to deck
 With shining ringlets her smooth ivory neck. Pope.

 I suppose this letter will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison's Spectator.
To LOCK. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To shut or fasten with locks.
 The garden, seated on the level floor,
 She left behind, and locking ev'ry door,
 Thought all secure. Dryden.
 2. To shut up or confine, as with locks.
 I am locked in one of them;
 If you do love me, you will find me out. Shakefpere.
 We do lock
 Our former sample in our strong-barr'd gates. Shakefp.
 Then seek to know those things which make us blest,
 And having found them, lock them in thy breast. Denham.
 The frighted dame
 The log in secret lock'd. Dryden's Ovid.
 If the door to a council be kept by armed men, and all such whose opinions are not liked kept out, the freedom of those within are infringed, and all their acts as void as if they were locked in. Dryden's En.
 One conduces to the poets completing of his work; the other slackens his pace, and locks him up like a knight-errant in an enchanted castle. Dryden's Dedicat. to the En.
 The father of the gods
 Confin'd their fury to those dark abodes,
 And lock'd 'em safe within, oppress'd with mountain loads. Dryden's En.
 If one third of the money in trade were locked up, must not the landholders receive one third less. Locke.
 Always lock up a cat in a closet where you keep your china plates, for fear the mice may steal in and break them. Swift.
 Your wine lock'd up,
 Plain milk will do the feat. Pope's Horace.
 3. To close fast.
 Death blasts his bloom, and locks his frozen eyes. Gay.
To LOCK. v. n.
 1. To become fast by a lock.
 For not of wood, nor of enduring brass,
 Doubly disparted it did lock and close,
 That when it locked, none might through it pass. Fa. Qu.
 2. To unite by mutual infection.
 Either they lock into each other, or slip one upon another's surface; as much of their surfaces touches as makes them cohere. Boyle.
Lo'CKER. n. f. [from lock.] Any thing that is closed with a lock; a drawer.
 I made lockers or drawers at the end of the boat. R. Crusoe.

 Her richest lockram 'bout her reeky neck,
 Clambring the walls to eye him. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Lo'CKRON. n. f. A kind of ramunculus.
Lo'COMO'TION. n. f. [locus and motus, Lat.] Power of change-ing place.
 All progression, or animal locomotion, is performed by drawing on, or impelling forward, some part which was before at quiet. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Lo'COMO'TIVE. adj. [locus and moveo, Lat.] Changing place;
 having the power of removing or changing place.
 I shall consider the motion, or locomotive faculty of animals. Derham's Physico-Theol.
 In the night too oft he kicks,
 Or shows his locomotive tricks. Prior.
 An animal cannot well be defined from any particular, or-ganical part, nor from its locomotive faculty, for some adhere to rocks. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Lo'CUST. n. f. [locustæ, Latin].
 The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts, which are not known among us: the old historians and modern travellers remark, that locusts are very numerous in Africa, and many places of Asia; that sometimes they fell like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they meet with.
 Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine, and the neighbouring countries. Calmet.
 To-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy coast. Exod.
 Air replete with the steams of animals, rotting, has produced pestilential fevers; such have likewise been raised by great quantities of dead locusts. Arbutnot on Air.
Lo'CUST-TREE. n. f.
 The locust-tree hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an unicapular hard pod, including roundish hard seeds, which are surrounded with a fungous stringy substance. Miller.

To LODGE. v. a. [logian, Saxon; loger, French.]
 1. To place in a temporary habitation.
 When he was come to the court of France, the king staid him by the name of the duke of York; lodged him;
 and accommodated him, in great state. Bacon's Henry VII.
 2. To afford a temporary dwelling; to supply with harbour for a night.
 Ev'ry house was proud to lodge a knight. Dryden.
 3. To place; to plant.
 When on the brink the foaming boar I met,
 And in his side thought to have lodg'd my spear,
 The desp'rate savage rush'd within my force,
 And bore me headlong with him down the rock. Orway.
 He lodg'd an arrow in a tender breast,
 That had so often to his own been prest. Addison's Ovid.
 In viewing again the ideas that are lodged in the memory,
 the mind is more than passive. Locke.
 4. To fix; to settle.
 By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
 And by whose pow'r I well might lodge a fear
 To be again displac'd. Shakefpere.
 I can give no reason,
 More than a lodg'd hate, and a certain loathing
 I bear Antonio. Shakefpere's Merch. of Venice.
 5. To place in the memory.
 This cunning the king would not understand, though he lodged it, and noted it, in some particulars. Bacon's H. VII.
 6. To harbour or cover.
 The deer is lodg'd, I've track'd her to her covert;
 Rush in at once. Addison's Cato.
 7. To afford place to.
 The memory can lodge a greater store of images, than all the senses can present at one time. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.
 8. To lay flat.
 Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,
 Though castles topple on their warders heads. Shakefp.
 We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
 Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the Summer corn,
 And make a dearth in this revolting land. Shakefpere.
To LODGE. v. n.
 1. To reside; to keep residence.
 Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye,
 And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie. Shakefp.
 Something holy lodges in that breast,
 And with these raptures moves the vocal air
 To testify his hidden residence. Milton.
 And dwells such rage in fustiest bosom then?
 And lodge such daring souls in little men? Pope.
 2. To take a temporary habitation.
 Why commands the king,
 That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
 While he himself keepeth in the cold field? Shakefp.
 I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakefpere's Othello.
 Thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people. 2 Sam. xvii. 8.
 3. To take up residence at night.
 My lords
 And soldiers, stay and lodge by me this night. Shakefp.
 Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of way-faring men, that I might leave my people. Jer. ix. 4.
 Here thou art but a stranger travelling to thy country; it is therefore a huge folly to be afflicted, because thou hast a less convenient inn to lodge in by the way. Taylor.
 4. To lie flat.
 Long cone wheat they reckon in Oxfordshire best for rank clays; and its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be mildewed. Mortimer's Husbandry.
LoDGE. n. f. [logis, French.]
 1. A small house in a park or forest.
 He brake up his court, and retired himself, his wife and children, into a certain forest thereby, which he calleth his desert, wherein he hath built two fine lodges. Sidney.
 I found him as melancholy as a lodge in a warren. Shak.
 He and his lady both are at the lodge,
 Upon the north side of this pleasant chace. Shakefpere.
 Thus at their shady lodge arriv'd, both flood,
 Both turn'd, and under open sky ador'd
 The God that made both sky, air, earth, Milton.
 Whenever I am turned out, my lodge descends upon a low-spirited family. Swift.
 2. Any small house; as, the porter's lodge.
Lo'DGEMENT. n. f. [from lodge; logement, French.]
 1. Accumulation, or collocation in a certain place.
 The curious lodgement and inoculation of the auditory nerves. Derham.
 An oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extra-vasated matter. Sharp's Surgery.
 2. Possession of the enemy's work.
 The military pedant is making lodgements, and fighting batt'ls, from one end of the year to the other. Addison.
Lo'DGER.

LOG

LO'DGER. n. f. [from ledge.]1. One who lives in rooms hired in the house of another. Bate tyke, call't thou me host? now, I scorn the term; nor shall my Nell keep lodgers. *Shakespeare's Henry V.*There were in a family, the man and his wife, three children, and three servants or lodgers. *Graunt's Bill.*Those houses are soonest infected that are crowded with multiplicity of lodgers, and nasty families. *Harvey.*The gentlewoman begged me to sleep; for that a lodger she had taken in was run mad. *Taylor, N^o. 88.*Sylla was reproached by his fellow lodger, that whilst the fellow lodger paid eight pounds one shilling and fivepence halfpenny for the uppermost story, he paid for the rest twenty-four pounds four shillings and fourpence halfpenny. *Arbutnot.*2. One that resides in any place. Look in that breast, most dirty dear; Say, can you find but one such lodger there? *Pope.*LO'DGING. n. f. [from lodge.]1. Temporary habitation; rooms hired in the house of another. I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin, And let him find it. *Shakespeare's Othello.*Let him change his lodging from one end of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. *Bacon.*At night he came To his known lodgings, and his country dame. *Dryden.*He desired his sister to bring her away to the lodgings of his friend. *Addison's Guardian, N^o. 155.*Wits take lodgings in the fount of Bow. *Pope.*2. Place of residence. Fair bosom fraught with virtue's richest treasure, The nest of love, the lodging of delight, The bower of bliss, the paradise of pleasure, The sacred harbour of that heavenly spright. *Spenser.*3. Harbour; covert. The hounds were uncoupled; and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. *Sidney.*4. Convenience to sleep on. Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodgings. *Ray on Creation.*LOFT. n. f. [loft, Welsh; or from lift.]1. A floor. There is a traverse placed in a loft above. *Bacon.*2. The highest floor. To lull him in his slumber soft, A trickling stream from high rock tumbling down, And ever drizzling rain upon the loft, Mixt with a murmuring wind. *Fairy Queen, b. i.*3. Rooms on high. Passing through the spheres of watchful fire, And hills of snow, and lofts of piled thunder. *Milton.*A weasel once made shift to slink In at a corn loft, through a chink. *Pope.*LOFTILY. adv. [from lofty.]1. On high; in an elevated place. Proudly; haughtily. They speak wickedly concerning oppression; they speak loftily. *Psal. lxxii. 8.*3. With elevation of language or sentiment; sublimely. By a logic that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. *Clarendon.*LOFTINESS. n. f. [from lofty.]1. Height; local elevation. There stript fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground. *Pope.*2. Sublimity; elevation of sentiment. Three poets in three distant ages born; The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd, The next in majesty; in both the last. *Dryden.*3. Pride; haughtiness. Augustus and Tiberius had loftiness enough in their temper, and affected to make a sovereign figure. *Collier.*LOFTY. adj. [from loft, or loft.]1. High; hovering; See lofty Lebanon his head advance, See nodding forests on the mountains dance. *Pope's Messiah.*2. Sublime; elevated in sentiment. He knew Himself to sing and build the lofty rhyme. *Milton.*3. Proud; haughty. Man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate, A lowly servant, but a lofty mate. *Dryden's Knight's Tale.*Lofty and four to them that lov'd him not; But to those men that fought him, sweet as Summer. *Shak.*LOO. n. f. [The original of this word is not known. Skinner derives it from luggan, Saxon; to lie; Junius from logge, Dutch, sluggish; perhaps the Latin lignum, is the true original.] A shapeless bulky piece of wood. Would the lightning had Burnt up those logs that thou'rt injoin'd to pile. *Shakespeare.*The worms with many feet are bred under logs of timber, and many times in gardens, where no logs are. Bacon.

Some logs, perhaps, upon the waters swim, An useless drift, which rudely cut within,

And hollow'd first a floating trough became, And cross some riv'let passage did begin. *Dryden.*The frightened dame The log in secret lock'd. *Dryden's Ovid.*2. An Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a cab, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr. Arbuthnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin. *Cabnet.*A meat offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil. *Lev. xiv. 10.*LOGARITHMS. n. f. [logarithme, Fr. logos and arithmos.]

Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratio's of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier lord Merchiston, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, Savilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers, contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion, as the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical one: for instance,

0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
1	2	4	8	16	32	64	128	256	512

Where the numbers above, beginning with (0), and arithmetically proportional, are called logarithms. The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by dividing the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and tripling them for the cube, and so on. *Harris.*LOGGERS. *n. f.*Loggers is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the game which is now called kitlepins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling. *Hammer.*Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with them. *Shakespeare's Hamlet.*LOGGERHEAD. n. f. [logge, Dutch, stupid and head, or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.] A dot; a blockhead; a thickskull. *Where ha't been, Hal?*With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or fourcore hogheads. *Shakespeare's Henry IV.*Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other peoples fires. L'Estrange.

To fall to loggerheads. } To scuffle; to fight without weapons. } To go to loggerheads. } pons.

A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell to loggerheads which should be his matter. *L'Estrange.*LOGGERHEADED. adj. [from loggerhead.] Dull; stupid; dolish.You loggerheaded and unpolish'd groom, what! no attendance? *Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.*LOGICK. n. f. [logique, French; logica, Latin, from logos.] The art of reasoning.Logick is the art of using reason well in our inquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others. *Watts's Logick.*Talk logick with acquaintance, And practise rhetoric in your common talk. *Shakespeare.*A logic that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. *Clarendon.*Here foam'd rebellious logick, gag'd and bound, There stript fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground. *Pope.*LOGICAL. adj. [from logick.]1. Pertaining to logick; taught in logick. The heretic complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilties. *Hooker, b. iii.*Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy. *Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.*We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability, in giving subtle rules, and finding out logical arguments, since it would be more perfection not to want them. *Baker.*2. Skilled in logick; furnished with logick. A man who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have a clear and logical head. *Addison's Spect. N^o. 291.*LOGICALLY. adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logick.How can her old good man With honour take her back again? From hence I logically gather, The woman cannot live with either. *Prior.*LOGICIAN. n. f. [logician, French; logicus, Latin.] A teacher or professor of logick; a man versed in logick. If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgment as invention, he may do great matters. *Bacon.*If we may believe our logicians, man is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter. *Addison.*Each staunch polemic stubborn as a rock, Each fierce logician still expelling Locke, Came whip and spur. Dunciad, b. iv. A logician

LOL

A logician might put a case that would serve for an exception. *Swift.*The Arabian physicians were subtle men, and most of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and shed subtilty upon their author. *Baker.*LOGMAN. n. f. [log and man.] One whose business is to carry logs. For your fake Am I this patient logman. *Shakespeare's Tempest.*LOGOMACHY. n. f. [λογμαχία.] A contention in words; a contention about words. Foreed terms of art did much puzzle sacred theology with distinctions, cavils, quiddities; and so transformed her to a meer kind of sophistry and logomachy. *Howel.*LOGWOOD. *n. f.*Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture; it is brought to us in very large and thick blocks or logs, and is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, strong, red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campeachy. It has been long known by the dyers, and was but lately introduced in medicine, and is found to be an excellent astringent. *Hill's Mat. Med.*To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water. *Peacham on Drawing.*LOHOCK. *n. f.*Lohock is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called Eclegmas, lambatives, or linctus's. *Quincy.*Lohocks and pectorals were prescribed, and venesection repeated. *Weyman's Surgery.*LOIN. n. f. [lloyn, Welsh.]1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher. 2. Loin; the reins. My face I'll grime with filth, Blanket my loins. *Shakespeare's King Lear.*Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb! Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. *Shakespeare, Rich. III.*High in the love of heav'n! yet from my loins Of God most high. *Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.*A multitude I like which the populous north Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to pass Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons Came like a deluge on the south. *Milton.*LOITER. v. n. [luter, Dutch.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries. *Shakespeare.*You loiter, while the spoils are thrown away. *Dryden.*Mark how he spends his time, whether he unactively loiters it away. *Locke.*If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity. *Rogers's Sermons.*LOITERER. n. f. [from loiter.] A lingerer; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory. Give gloves to thy reapers a largess to cry, And daily to loiterers have a good eye. *Tusser's Hush.*The poor, by idleness or untruthfulness, are riotous spenders, vagabonds, and loiterers. *Hayward.*Where ha't thou been, thou loiterer? Though my eyes clos'd, my arms have still been open'd, To search if thou wert come. *Orway.*Providence would only enter mankind into the useful industry, that we live not like idle loiterers and truants. *Mere.*Ever listless loit'ers, that attend No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend. *Pope.*LOLL. v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful.]1. To lean idly; to rest lazily against any thing. So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so shakes and pulls me. *Shakespeare's Othello.*He is not lolling on a lewd love bed, But on his knees at meditation. *Shakespeare, Rich. III.*Close by a softly murr'ring stream, Where lovers us'd to loll and dream. *Hudibras, p. i.*And lay your guilty limbs in Tyrian beds, Void of care he lolls supine in state. *Dryden.*And leaves his business to be done by fate, But wanton now, and lolling at our ease, We suffer all the inveterate ills of peace. Dryden.

LON

A lazy, lolling sort

Of ever listless loit'ers. *Dunciad, b. iv.*2. To hang out. Used of the tongue hanging out in weariness or play. The triple porter of the Stygian feat, With lolling tongue lay fawning at thy feet. *Dryden.*With harmless play amidst the bowls he pass'd, And with his lolling tongue assay'd the taste. *Dryden.*To LOLL. v. n. To put out; used of the tongue exerted. All authors to their own defects are blind; Hadst thou but, Janus-like, a face behind, To see the people, when splay mouths they make, To mark their fingers pointed at thy back, Their tongues loll'd out a foot. *Dryden's Persius.*By Strymon's freezing streams he sat alone, Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs, Fierce tygers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues. *Dryden's Virgil.*By the wolf were laid the martial twins; Intrepid on her swelling dugs they hung, The foster-dam loll'd out her fawning tongue. *Dryden.*LOMP. n. f. A kind of roundish fish. LONE. adj. [contracted from alone.]1. Solitary. Here the lone hour a blank of life displays. Thus vanish sceptres, coronets and balls, And leave you in lone woods, or empty walls. *Pope.*2. Single; without company. No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rookery, is more contemplative than this court. *Pope.*LONELINESS. n. f. [from lone.] Solitude; want of company; disposition to avoid company. The huge and sportful assembly grew to him a tedious loneliness, esteeming nobody found since Daiphantus was lost. *Sidney.*I see The mystery of your loneliness, and find Your salt tears head. *Shakespeare.*LONELY. adj. [from lone.] Solitary; addicted to solitude.  In which y' are hamper'd by the fetlock, Cannot but put y' in mind of wedlock. Hudibras, p. ii.
 LOORD. n. f. [loerd, Dutch; from lurdant, French; lurdan, Erse; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow. D. Treux derives lurdant from lorde or lourde, a village in Gascoigne, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they. But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of subtilty, from which the Gascoignes are so far removed, that, at this day, they are awkward and heavy to a proverb. The Erse imports some degree of knavery, but then it is used in a ludicrous sense, as in English, you pretty rogue; though in general it denotes reproachful heaviness, or stupid laziness. Spenser's Scholiast says, loord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord; and therefore the Danes, that usurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called, for more dread than dignity, lurdans, i. e. lord Danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm, that if it fortune'd a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw the Dane set foot upon the same, he must return back till the Dane was clean over, else he must abide no less than present death: but being afterward expelled, the name of lurdane became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppressed, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quartern ague the fever lurdane. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid dullness rather than magisterial arrogance. Macbean.] A drone.
 Siker, thou'st but a lazy loord,
 And rekes much of thy fwinke,
 That with fond terms and witless words
 To bleer mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Pastorals.
 To LOOSE. v. a. [lejan, Saxon.]

The lighter'd couriers ran;
They rush'd, and won by turns, and lost the day. Dryden.

2. To be deprived of.
He lost his right hand with a shot, and, instead thereof, ever after used a hand of iron. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

Who conquer'd him, and in what fatal strife
The youth, without a wound, could lose his life. Dryden.

3. To suffer deprivation of.
The fear of the Lord goeth before obtaining of authority;
but roughness and pride is the losing thereof. Ecclesi. x. 21.

If salt have lost his favour, wherewith shall it be salted?
Matt. v. 13.

4. To possess no longer; contrary to keep.
They have lost their trade of woollen drapery. Graunt.

No youth shall equal hopes of glory give;
The Trojan honour and the Roman boast,
Admir'd when living, and ador'd when lost. Dryden.

We should never quite lose sight of the country, though we are sometimes entertained with a distant prospect of it.

5. To have any thing gone so as that it cannot be found, or had again.
But if to honour lost 'tis still decreed
For you my bowl shall flow, my flocks shall bleed;
Judge and assert my right, impartial Jove. Pope's Odyssey.

When men are openly abandoned, and lost to all shame, they have no reason to think it hard, if their memory be reproached. Swift.

6. To bewilder.
I will go lose myself,
And wander up and down to view the city. Shakespeare.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

When the mind pursues the idea of infinity, it uses the ideas and repetitions of numbers, which are so many distinct ideas, kept best by number from running into a confused heap, wherein the mind loses itself. Locke.

7. To deprive of.
How should you go about to lose him a wife he loves with so much passion. Temple.

LOT

8. To kill; to destroy.
9. To throw away; to employ ineffectually.
He has merit, good nature, and integrity, that are too often lost upon great men, or at least are not all three a match for flattery. Pope's Letters.

10. To miss; to part with, so as not to recover.
These sharp encounters, where always many more men are lost than are killed or taken prisoners, put such a stop to Middleton's march, that he was glad to retire. Clarendon.

To LOSE. v. n.
1. Not to win.
We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shakespeare.

2. To decline; to fail.
Wisdom in discourse with her loses discount'nanc'd, and like folly shews. Milton.

LO'SEABLE. adj. [from lose.] Subject to privation.
Consider whether motion, or a propensity to it, be an inherent quality belonging to atoms in general, and not loseable by them. Boyle.

LO'SEL. n. f. [from lo, Saxon.] A scoundrel; a forry worthless fellow. A word now obsolete.

Such loses and scatterlings cannot easily, by any shrewd, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser.

A loset wand'ring by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His bair breast. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

And loses lifted high, where I did look,
I mean to turn the next leaf of the book. Hubbard's Tale.

Be not with work of loses wit defamed,
Ne let such verses poetry be named. Hubbard's Tale.

By Cambridge a town I do know,
Whose loses by loses doth shew
More here than is needful to tell. Tusser's Husbandry.

A grofs hag!
And, loset, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

LO'SER. n. f. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing; one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope; the contrary to winner or gainer.

With the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win. Shakespeare.

No man can be provident of his time that is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and he that answers, are equal losers of their time. Taylor's Holy Living.

Losers and malecontents, whose portion and inheritance is a freedom to speak. South's Sermons.

It cannot last, because that act seems to have been carried on rather by the interest of particular countries, than by that of the whole, which must be a loser by it. Temple.

A bull with gilded horns,
Shall be the portion of the conquering chief,
A sword and helm shall cheer the loser's grief. Dryden.

LOSS. n. f. [from lose.]
1. Forfeiture; the contrary to gain.
The only gain he purchased was to be capable of loss and detriment for the good of others. Hooker, b. v.

An evil natured son is the dishonour of his father that begat him; and a foolish daughter is born to his loss. Ecclesi.

The statement of price of any of the landholder's commodities, lessens his income, and is a clear loss. Locke.

—No other harm but loss of such a lord. Shakespeare.

—The loss of such a lord includes all harms.

3. Deprivation.
Her fellow ships from far her loss deserv'd;
But only she was sunk, and all were safe beside. Dryden.

4. Destruction.
There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, with the slaughter of above two thousand of the enemy, with the loss but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

5. Fault; puzzle.
Not the least transaction of sense and motion in man, but philosophers are at a loss to comprehend. South's Sermons.

Reason is always striving, and always at a loss, while it is exercised about that which is not its proper object. Dryden.

A man may sometimes be at a loss which side to close with. Baker's Refl. on Learning.

6. Useless application.
It would be loss of time to explain any farther our superiority to the enemy in numbers of men and horse. Addison.

LOST. participle adj. [from lose.] No longer perceptible.
In seventeen days appear'd your pleasing coat,
And woody mountains, half in vapours lost. Pope's Odyssey.

LOST. n. f. [Saxon, Gothick; plor, Saxon; lot, Dutch.]

1. Fortune; state assigned.
Kala at length concluded my ling'ring lot;
Disdain me not, although I be not fair, Who

LOV

Who is an heir of many hundred sheep,
Doth beauty keep which never sun can burn,
Nor storms do turn. Sidney, b. i.

Our own lot is best; and by aiming at what we have not,
we lose what we have already. L'Estrange's Fables.

Prepar'd I stand; he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope's Odyssey.

2. A die, or any thing used in determining chances.
Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scape-goat. Lev. xvi. 8.

Their talks in equal portions the divides,
And where unequal, there by lots decides. Dryden's Virg.

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots, to shew, that he would not voluntarily expose them to so imminent danger.

3. It seems in Shakespeare to signify a lucky or wished chance.
If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks.

My name hath touch'd your ears; it is Menenius. Shakespeare.

4. A portion; a parcel of goods as being drawn by lot: as;
what lot of silks had you at the sale?

5. Proportion of taxes: as; to pay lot and lot.
Lot tree or nettle tree. n. f. [Celtic.] See LOTOS.

The leaves of the lot tree are like those of the nettle; the flowers consist of five leaves, expanded in form of a rose, containing many short stamina in the bosom: the fruit, which is a roundish berry, grows single in the bosom of its leaves.

The fruit of this tree is not so tempting to us, as it was to the companions of Ulysses: the wood is durable, and used to make pipes for wind instruments: the root is proper for hafts of knives, and was highly esteemed by the Romans for its beauty and use. Miller.

LOTOS. n. f. [Latin.] See LOTUS.
The trees around them all their food produce,
Lotos, the name divine, nectareous juice. Pope's Odyssey.

LO'TION. n. f. [Latin, Latin; lotio, French.]

A lotion is a form of medicine compounded of aqueous liquids, used to wash any part with; from lavo, to wash.

In lotions in women's cases, he orders two potions of hellebore macerated in two cytolæ of water. Arbuthnot on Coins.

LO'TTERY. n. f. [Latin, Fr. from lot.] A game of chance;
a fortige; distribution of prizes by chance; a play in which lots are drawn for prizes.

Let high-sighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The lottery that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead, will never be chosen by any but whom you shall rightly love. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Every warrior may be said to be a soldier of fortune, and the best commanders to have a kind of lottery for their work. South's Sermons.

Fortune, that with malicious joy
Does man, her slave, oppress, Still various and unconstant still,
Promotes, degrades, delights in strife,
And makes a lottery of life. Dryden's Horace.

LO'VAGE. n. f. [from love, Latin.]

The loves of the loving leaves are cut about their borders like those of parsley; the flower consists, for the most part, of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose; each of these flowers are succeeded by two oblong, gibbous, furrowed seeds, which on one side have a leafy border. This plant is often used in medicine. Miller.

LOUD. adv.
1. Noisy; striking the ear with great force.
Contenting on the Lesbian shore,
His prowess Philomelides confest'd,
And loud acclaiming Greeks the victor blest'd. Pope.

The numbers soft and clear,
Gently steal upon the ear;
Now louder, and yet louder rise,
And fill with spreading sounds the skies. Pope's St. Cecilia.

2. Clamorous; turbulent.
She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house. Prov. vii. 11.

LO'UDLY. adv. [from loud.]
1. Noisily; so as to be heard far.
The soldier that philosopher well blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd. Denham.

2. Clamorously.
I read above fifty pamphlets, written by as many presbyterian divines, loudly disclaiming toleration. Swift.

LO'UDNESS. n. f. Noise; force of sound; turbulence; vehemence or furfulness of clamour.

Had any disaster made room for grief, it would have moved according to prudence, and the proportions of the provocation: it would not have fallen out into complaint or loudness. South's Sermons.

To LOVE. v. a. [Lupian, Saxon.]

1. To regard with passionate affection, as that of one sex to the other.

Good Shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love;
—It is to be made all of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service;
It is to be all made of fantasy;
All made of passion, and all made of wishes;
All adoration, duty, and obedience;
All humbleness, all patience, all impatience;
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare. As you like it.

I could not love I'm sure
One who in love were wise. Cowley.

The jealous man wishes himself a kind of deity to the person he loves; he would be the only employment of her thoughts. Addison's Spectator, N. 170.

2. To regard with the affection of a friend.
None but his brethren he, and sisters, knew;
Whom the kind youth prefer'd to me,
And much above myself I lov'd them too. Cowley.

3. To regard with parental tenderness.
He that loveth me shall be loved of my father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. John xiv. 21.

4. To be pleased with.
Fish used to salt water delight more in fresh: we see that salmons and smelts love to get into rivers, though against the stream. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 703.

Wit, eloquence, and poetry;
Arts which I lov'd. Cowley.

He lov'd my worthless rhimes. Cowley.

5. To regard with reverent unwillingness to offend.
Love the Lord thy God with all thine heart. Deut. vi. 5.

LOVE. n. f. [from the verb.]

The dewie leaves among! Spenser's Epithalam.

While idly I stood looking on,
I found th' effect of love in idleness. Shakespeare.

My tales of love were wont to weary you;
I know you joy not in a love discourse. Shakespeare.

What! have I 'scaped love letters in the holiday-time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Shakespeare.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye,
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakespeare.

What need a vermillion'd lip for that;
Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the morn. Milton.

Love quarrels oft in pleasing concord end,
Not wedlock treachery, end'ring life. Milton's Agon.

A love potion works more by the strength of charm than nature. Collier on Popularity.

You know y' are in my pow'r by making love. Dryden.

Let mutual joys our mutual trust combine,
And love, and love-born confidence be thine. Pope.

Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,
And these love-darting eyes must roll no more. Pope.

2. Kindness; good-will; friendship.
Death grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st,
And kiss me as thy wife; misery's love. Shakespeare's King John.

What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?
My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;
That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants. Shakespeare.

God brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince. Dan. i. 9.

The one preach Christ of contention, but the other of love. Phil. i. 17.

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another. Rom. xiii. 35.

Unwearied have we spent the nights,
Till the Ledean stars, so fam'd for love,

3. Courtship.
Demetrius
Made love to Nedar's daughter Helena,
And won her soul. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

If you will marry make your loves to me,
My lady is bespoken. Shakespeare's King Lear.

I to your assistance do make love,
Marking the business from the common eye. Shakespeare.

The enquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it; the knowledge of truth, the preference of it; and the belief of truth, the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. Bacon's Essays.

4. Tenderness; parental care.
No religion that ever was so fully represents the goodness of God, and his tender love to mankind, which is the most powerful argument to the love of God. Tillotson's Sermons.

5. Liking; inclination to: as, the love of one's country.

6. Object beloved.
Open the temple gates unto my love. Spenser.

If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue;
These pretty pleasures might me move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Shakespeare.

15 S

LOV

The banish'd never hopes his love to see.
The lover and the love of human kind. Dryden.
7. Lewdness.
He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shakesp. Rich. III.
8. Unreasonable liking.
The love to sin makes a man sin against his own reason.
Men in love with their opinions may not only suppose what is in question, but allege wrong matter of fact. Locke.
9. Fondness; concord.
Come love and health to all!
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine; fill full. Shak.
Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness? 1 Cor. iv. 21.
10. Principle of union.
Love is the great instrument of nature, the bond and cement of society, the spirit and spring of the universe: love is such an affection as cannot so properly be said to be in the soul, as the soul to be in that: it is the whole man wrapt up into one desire. South's Sermons.
11. Picturelike representation of love.
The lovely babe was born with ev'ry grace:
Such was his form as painters, when they show
Their utmost art, on naked loves below. Dryden's Ovid.
12. A word of endearment.
'Tis no dishonour, trust me, love, 'tis none;
I would die for thee. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
13. Due reverence to God.
I know that you have not the love of God in you. John.
Love is of two sorts, of friendship and of desire; the one betwixt friends, the other betwixt lovers; the one a rational, the other a sensitive love: so our love of God consists of two parts, as esteeming of God, and desiring of him. Hammond.
The love of God makes a man chaste without the laborious arts of fasting, and exterior disciplines; he reaches at glory without any other arms but those of love. Taylor.
14. A kind of thin silk stuff.
This leaf held near the eye, and obverted to the light, appeared so full of pores, with such a transparency as that of a sieve, a piece of cyprus, or lovehead. Boyle on Colours.
LOVEAPPLE. n. f.
The loveapple has a flower consisting of one leaf, which expands in a circular order; the style afterwards becomes a roundish, soft, fleshy fruit, divided into several cells, which contain many flat seeds. Miller.

as to excite love.
Thou look'st
Lovely dreadful. Orway's Venice Preserv'd.
LOVELINESS. n. f. [from lovely.] Amiableness; qualities of mind or body that excite love.
Carrying thus in one person the only two bands of goodwill, loveliness and lovingness. Sidney, b. i.
When I approach
Her loveliness, so absolute she seems,
That what she wills to do, or say,
Seems wisest, virtuousest, discreetest, best. Milt. Pa. Lost.
If there is such a native loveliness in the sex, as to make them victorious when they are in the wrong, how reftitless is their power when they are on the side of truth? Addison.
LOVELORN. adj. [love and lorn.] Forsaken of one's love.
The love-lorn nightingale,
Nightly to thee her sad long mourneth well. Milton.
LOVELY. adj. [from love.] Amiaable; exciting love.

There were lice upon man and beast. Exod. viii. 18.
Frogs, lice, and flies, mult all his palace fill With loath'd intrusion. Milton.
It is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence to affirm, that the first men might proceed out of the tumours of leaves of trees, as maggots and flies are supposed to do now, or might grow upon trees; or perhaps might be the lice of some prodigious animals, whose species is now extinct.
Bentley's Sermons.
Not that I value the money the fourth part of the kip of a louse. Swift.
To LOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To clean from lice.
As for all other good women, that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to louse themselves in the sun-

With cries they fill'd the holy fane;
Then thus with lowly voice Ilioneus began. Dryden.
The heavens are not pure in his sight, and he charges even his angels with folly; with how lowly a reverence must we bow down our souls before so excellent a being, and adore a nature so much superior to our own. Rogers's Sermon.
2. Mean; wanting dignity; not great.
For from the natal hour distinctive names,
One common right the great and lowly claims. Pope.
3. Not lofty; not sublime.
For all who read, and reading not disdain,
These rural poems, and their lowly strain,
The name of Varus oft inscrib'd shall see. Dryd. Silvanus.
Lo'wly. adv. [from low.]
1. Not highly; meanly; without grandeur; without dignity.
I will shew myself highly fed, and lowly taught; I know my business is but to the court. Shakespeare.
'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.
2. Humbly; meekly; modestly.
Heav'n is for thee too high
To know what passes there; be lowly wife:
Think only what concerns thee, and thy being. Milton.
Another crowd

Lo'yally. adv. [from loyal.] With fidelity; with true adherence to a king.
The circling year I wait, with ampler stores,
And fitter pomp, to hail my native shores;
Then by my realms due homage would be paid,
For wealthy kings are loyally obey'd. Pope's Odyssey.
Lo'yality. n. f. [loialité, French.]
1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.
Though loyalty, well held, to fools does make
Our faith meer folly; yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer. Shakespeare.
To day shalt thou behold a subject die
For truth, for duty, and for loyalty. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Commotions flaw'd the heart
Of all their loyalties. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
He had never had any veneration for the court, but only such loyalty to the king as the law required. Clarendon.
Unshaken, undecid'd, unterrify'd,
His loyalty he kept. Milton.
2. Fidelity to a lady, or lover.
Lo'zenge. n. f. [lozange, French.] Of unknown etymology.
1. A rhomb.
The best builders resolve upon rectangular squares, as a mean between too few and too many angles; and through the equal inclination of the sides, they are stronger than the rhomb or lozenge. Wotton's Architecture.
2. Lozenge is a form of a medicine made into small pieces,

3. Wanton; lewd. [lubrique, French.]
Why were we hurry'd down
This lubrick and adul'tate age;
Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
T' encrease the steaming ordures of the stage. Dryden.
Lu'bricous. adj. [lubricus, Latin.]
1. Slippery; smooth.
The parts of water being voluble and lubricous as well as fine, it easily insinuates itself into the tubes of vegetables, and by that means introduces into them the matter it bears along with it. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
2. Uncertain.
The judgment being the leading power, if it be stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and peremptorily resolved in them, the practice will be as irregular as the conceptions. Glanville's Scip.
Lu'bric.

LUC

LUBRIFICATION. n. f. [lubricus and facio, Latin.] The act of smoothing.

A twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction and lubrication of the heads of the bones; an oily one, furnished by the marrow; a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glandules seated in the articulations.

LUBRICATION. n. f. [lubricus and facio, Latin.] The act of lubricating or smoothing.

The cause is lubrication and relaxation, as in medicines emollient; such as milk, honey, and mallows.

LUC. n. f. [perhaps from lupus, Latin.] A pike full grown.

They give the dozen white lues in their coat.

LUCENT. adj. [lucens, Latin.] Shining; bright; splendid.

I meant the day-star should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucid seat.

A spot like which perhaps Astronomer in the sun's lucid orb,
Through his glaz'd optick tube yet never saw.

LUCID. n. f. [lucidus, Latin; lucide, French.]
1. Shining; bright; glittering.

Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd;

Livelier than Melibœus.

It contracts it, preserving the eye from being injured by too vehement and lucid an object, and again dilates it for the apprehending objects more remote in a fainter light.

If at the same time a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at the distance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glass where it is most in motion, the electric vapour which is excited by the friction of the glass against the hand will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid like a glow-worm.

The pearly shell its lucid globe unfold,
And Phœbus warm the rip'ning ore to gold.

2. Pellucid; transparent.

On the fertile banks
Of Abbana and Phœnar, lucid streams.

On the transparent side of a globe, half silver and half of a transparent metal, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect; not darkened with madness.

The long dissensions of the two houses, which, although they had had lucid intervals and happy pauses, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
Strike through and make a lucid interval;

But Shadwell's genuine night admits no rays,
His rising fogs prevail upon the day.

I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired he would please to let me see his book.

A few sensual and voluptuous persons may, for a season, eclipse this native light of the soul; but can never so wholly smother and extinguish it, but that, at some lucid intervals, it will recover itself again, and shine forth to the conviction of their conscience.

LUCIDITY. n. f. [from lucid.] Splendor; brightness.

LUCIFEROUS. adj. [lucifer, Latin.] Giving light; affording means of discovery.

The experiment is in itself not ignoble, and luciferous enough, as shewing a new way to produce a volatile salt.

LUCIFICK. adj. [lux and facio, Latin.] Making light; producing light.

When made to converge; and so mixed together; though their lucifick motion be continued, yet by interfering, that equal motion, which is the colorifick, is interrupted.

LUCIDITY. adj. [lux and facio, Latin.] Making light; producing light.

When made to converge; and so mixed together; though their lucifick motion be continued, yet by interfering, that equal motion, which is the colorifick, is interrupted.

LUCK. n. f. [geluck, Dutch.]

1. Chance; accident; fortune; hap; casual event.

He forc'd his neck into a nooze,
To shew his play at fast and loose;

And when he chanc'd to escape, mistook
For art and subtlety, his luck.

Some such method may be found by human industry or luck, by which compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than they are divided into by the fire.

2. Fortune, good or bad.

Glad of such luck the luckless lucky maid,
A long time with that savage people staid;

To gather breath in many miseries.

Farewel, good Salisbury, and good luck go with thee.

I did demand what news from Shrewsbury.
He told me, that rebellion had ill luck,

And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold.
That part of mankind who have had the justice, or the luck, to pass, in common opinion, for the wisest, have followed a very different scent.

LUD

Such, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed.

The guests are found too num'rous for the treat,
But all, it seems, who had the luck to eat,

Swear they ne'er tasted more delicious meat.

LUDICIOUS. adj. [from lucky.] Fortunately; by good hap.

It is the pencil thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth, to express the foam, which the painter with all his skill could not form.

It happens luckily for the establishment of a new race of kings upon the British throne, that the first of this royal line has all high qualifications.

LUDICNESS. n. f. [from lucky.] Good fortune; good hap; casual happiness.

He who sometimes lights on truth, is in the right but by chance; and I know not whether the luckiness of the accident will excuse the irregularity of his proceeding.

LUDICLESS. adj. [from luck.] Unfortunate; unhappy.

Glad of such luck, the luckless lucky maid,
A long time with that savage people staid;

To gather breath in many miseries.

Never shall my thoughts be base,
Though luckless, yet without disgrace.

What else but his immoderate lust of pow'r,
Pray's made and granted in a luckless hour?

LUDICRY. n. f. [from luck; geluckig, Dutch.] Fortunate; happy by chance.

But I more fearful, or more lucky wight, Disin'd with that deformed, dismal sight,

Fled fast away.

Perhaps some arm more lucky than the rest,
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage.

LUDICRATIVE. adj. [lucratif, French; lucratus, Latin.] Gainful; profitable; bringing money.

The trade of merchandize being the most lucrative, may bear usury at a good rate; other contracts not so.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to pursue the more dangerous way of living by war, than the more lucrative method of life by agriculture.

LUDICRE. n. f. [lucrum, Latin.] Gain; profit; pecuniary advantage.

In an ill sense.

Malice and lure in them
Have laid this woe here.

They all the sacred mysteries of heav'n
To their own vile advantages shall turn,
Of lucre, and ambition.

A foul supreme in each hard instance try'd,
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride,
The rage of pow'r, the blast of publick breath,
The lust of lucre, and the dread of death.

What can be thought of the procuring letters by fraud, and the printing them merely for lucre?

LUDICEROUS. adj. [lucrum and fero, Latin.] Gainful; profitable.

Silver was afterwards separated from the gold, but in so small a quantity, that the experiment, the cost and pains considered, was not luciferous.

LUDICRICK. adj. [lucrum and facio, Latin.] Producing gain.

LUDICATION. n. f. [luctor, Latin.] Struggle; effort; contest.

LUCUBRATE. n. f. [lucubror, Latin.] To watch; to study by night.

LUCUBRATION. n. f. [lucubratio, Latin.] Study by candle-light; nocturnal study; any thing composed by night.

Thy lucubrations have been perused by several of our friends.

LUCUBRATORY. adj. [lucubratorius, from lucubror, Latin.] Composed by candle-light.

You must have a sober dish of coffee, and a solitary candle at your side, to write an epistle lucubratory to your friend.

LUCULENT. adj. [luculentus, Latin.]

1. Clear; transparent; lucid. This word is perhaps not used in this sense by any other writer.

And luculent along
The purer rivers flow.

2. Certain; evident.

They are against the obstinate incredulity of the Jews, the most luculent testimonies that Christian religion hath.

LUDICROUS. adj. [ludicr, Latin.] Burlesque; merry; sportive; exciting laughter.

Plutarch quotes this as an instance of Homer's judgment, in closing a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction.

LUDICROUSLY. adv. [from ludicrous.] Sportively; in burlesque; in a manner that may excite laughter.

LUDICROUSNESS. n. f. [from ludicrous.] Burlesque; sportiveness; merry cast or manner; ridiculousness.

LUDIFICATION. n. f. [ludificor, Latin.] The act of mocking, or making sport with another.

LUK

LUFF. n. f. [in Scotland.] The palm of the hand; as, clap me aris in my luff.

TO LUG. v. n. [or loof.] To keep close to the wind. Sea term.

Contract your swelling sails, and luff to wind.

TO LUG. v. a. [aluccan, Saxon; to pull; lega, Swedish, the hollow of the hand.]

1. To hall or drag; to pull with rugged violence.

You gods! why this
Will lug your priests and servants from your sides.

Thy bear is safe, and out of peril,
Though lugg'd indeed, and wounded very ill.

When savage bears agree with bears,
Shall secret ones lug fancies by th' ears.

See him drag his feeble legs about Like hounds ill coupled: Jowler lugs him still Through hedges.

Whole pleasure is to see a strumpet tear
A cynick's beard, and lug him by the hair.

Either every single animal spirit must convey a whole representation, or else they must divide the image amongst them, and so lug off every one his share.

TO LUG OUT. To draw a sword, in burlesque language.

But buff and belmen never know their cares,
No time, nor trick of law, their action bars;

They will be heard, or they lug out and cut.

TO LUG. v. n. To drag; to come heavily: perhaps only misprinted for lugs.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air, too damp, and lugs along,

As if she were a body in a body.

LUG. n. f.

1. A kind of small fish.

They feed on salt unmerchantable pilchards, tag worms, lugs, and little crabs.

2. [In Scotland.] An ear.

3. Lug, a land measure; a pole or perch.

That ample pit, yet far renown'd
For the large leap which Debon did compel Ceaulin to make, being eight lugs of ground.

LU'GAGE. n. f. [from lug.] Any thing cumbersome and unwieldy that is to be carried away; any thing of more weight than value.

Come bring your luggage nobly on your back.

What do you mean
To doat thus on such luggage?

Think not thou to find me slack, or need
Thy politic maxims, or that cumbersome
Luggage of war there shewn me.

How durst thou with that fullen luggage
O' th' self, old it'n, and other baggage,
T' oppose thy lumber against us?

The mind of man is too light to bear much certainty among the rustling winds of passion and opinion; and if the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be cast out till all be shipwrecked.

A lively faith will bear aloft the mind,
And leave the luggage of good works behind.

I am gathering up my luggage, and preparing for my journey.

LUGUBRIOUS. adj. [lugubris, French; lugubris, Latin.] Mournful; sorrowful.

A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a sad or whining tone, makes up the sum of many mens humiliations.

LUKEWARM. adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Saxon, is pleod; in old Frisick blig; in Dutch lucht; whence probably our lute, to which warm may be added, to determine, by the first word, the force of the second, as we say, boiling hot.]

1. Moderately or mildly warm; so warm as to give only a pleasing sensation.

A dreary corse, whose life away did pass,
All wallow'd in his own, yet lukewarm blood;
That from his wound yet welled fresh alas!

May you a better feast never behold,
You knot of mouth friends; smoke and lukewarm water
Is your perfection.

Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to temperate hot and sharp humours.

Whence is it but from this attractive power that water, which alone diffils with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not diffil from salt of tartar without a great heat?

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous.

If some few continue steadfast, it is an obedience to lukewarm and languishing, that it merits not the name of passion.

This sober conduct is a mighty virtue
In lukewarm patriots.

LUKEWARMLY. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. With moderate Warmth.

2. With indifference.

LUKEWARMNESS. n. f. [from lukewarm.]

LUM

1. Moderate or pleasing heat.

2. Indifference; want of ardour.

Some kind of zeal counts all merciful moderation lukewarmness.

The defect of zeal is lukewarmness, or coldness in religion; the excess is inordinate heat and spiritual fury.

Go dry your chaff and flubble, give fire to the zeal of your faction, and reproach them with lukewarmness.

TO LULL. v. a. [lulla, Danish; lallo, Latin.]

1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound.

There trickled softly down
A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play
Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound
To lull him soft a sleep, that by it lay.

Such sweet compulsion doth in mulick lie,
To lull the daughters of necessity.

These lull'd by nightingales embracing slept.

2. To compose; to quiet; to put to rest.

To find a foe it shall not be his hap,
And peace shall lull him in her flow'ry lap.

No more these scenes my meditations aid,
Or lull to rest the visionary maid.

By the vocal woods and waters lull'd,
And lost in lonely musing in a dream.

LU'LLABY. n. f. [lullus, Latin. Quem nuticum fuisse deunt contentit Turnebus, from lull: it is observable that the nurses call sleep by, by; lullaby is therefore lull to sleep.] A song to still babes.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles keft,
Sung lullaby, to bring the world to rest.

Philomel, with melody,
Sing in your sweet lullaby;

Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby.

If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty further.

—Marry, Sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again.

Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children.

LUMBA'GO. n. f. [lumbi, Lat. the loins.]

Lumbago's are pains very troublesome about the loins, and small of the back, such as precede ague fits and fevers: they are most commonly from fullness and acrimony, in commotion with a disposition to yawnings, shudderings, and erratic pains in other parts, and go off with evacuation; generally by sweat, and other critical discharges of fevers.

LUMBER. n. f. [loma, geloma, Saxon; household stuff; lommering, the dirt of an house, Dutch.] Any thing useless or cumbersome; any thing of more bulk than value.

The very bed was violated
By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains;
And thrown amongst the common lumber.

One son at home
Concerns thee more than many guests to come.
If to some useful art he be not bred,
He grows more lumber, and is worse than dead.

Thy neighbour has remov'd his wretched store,
Few hands will rid the lumber of the poor.

If God intended not the precise use of every single atom, that atom had been no better than a piece of lumber.

The poring schoolasts mark;
Wits, who, like owls, see only in the dark;

A lumber-house of books in ev'ry head.

TO LUMBER. v. a. [from the noun.] To heap like useless goods irregularly.

In Kollo we must have so much stuff lumbered together, that not the least beauty of tragedy can appear.

TO LUMBER. v. n. To move heavily, as burthened with his own bulk.

First let them run at large,
Not lumber o'er the meads; nor cross the wood.

LUMINARY. n. f. [luminare, Latin; luminaires, French.]

1. Any body which gives light.

The great luminary
Dispenses light from far.

2. Any thing which gives intelligence.

Sir John Graham, I know not upon what luminaries he espied in his face, dissuaded him from marriage.

3. Any one that instructs mankind.

The circulation of the blood, and the weight and spring of the air, had been reserved for a late happy discovery by two great luminaries of this island.

LUMINATION. n. f. [from lumen.] Emission of light.

LUMINOUS. n. f. [lumineux, French.]

1. Shining; emitting light.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly, broken and incinerate.

The luminous inferior orbs inclos'd,
From chaos.

How came the sun to be luminous? Not from the necessity of natural causes.

LUN

2. Enlightened.
Earth may, industrious of herself, fetch day,
Travelling east; and with her part averſe
From the ſun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Loſt, b. viii.
3. Shining; bright.
The moſt luminous of the priſmatick colours are the yellow and orange: theſe affect the ſenſes more ſtrongly than all the reſt together. Newton's Opticks.
- LUMP. n. ſ. [lompe, Dutch.]
1. A ſmall maſs of any matter.
The weed kal is by the Egyptians uſed firſt for fuel, and then they cruſh the aſhes into lumps like a ſtone, and ſo ſell them to the Venetians. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.
Without this various agitation of the water, how could lumps of ſugar or ſalt caſt into it be ſo perfectly diſſolved in it, that the lumps themſelves totally diſappear? Boyle.
An Ombite wretch is priſ'ner made;
Whoſe fleſh torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe
In morſels cut. Tate.
Ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,
Were ſorted well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dry.
To conceive thus of the ſoul's intimate union with an infinite being, and by that union receiving of ideas, leads one into as groſs thoughts, as a country-maid would have of an infinite butter-print, the ſeveral parts whereof being applied to her lump of butter, left on it the figure or idea there was preſent need of. Locke.
2. A ſhapeleſs maſs.
Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigeſted lump;
As crooked in thy manners as thy ſhape. Shak. Henry VI.
Bluſh, bluſh, thou lump of foul deformity. Shakespeare.
Why might not there have been, in this great maſs, huge lumps of ſolid matter, which, without any form or order, might be jumbled together. Kell againſt Burnet.
3. Maſs undiſtinguiſhed.
All mens honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be faſhion'd Into what pinch he pleaſe. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
It is rare to find any of theſe metals pure; but copper, iron, gold, ſilver, lead, and tin, all promiſcuouſly in one lump. Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.
4. The whole together; the groſs.
If my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, they may buy them in the lump. Addiſon.
Other epidemical vices are riſe and predominant only for a ſeaſon, and muſt not be aſcribed to human nature in the lump. Bentley's Sermons.
The principal gentlemen of ſeveral counties are ſigmatized in a lump, under the notion of being papists. Swift.
- TO LUMP. v. a. To take in the groſs, without attention to particulars.
The expences ought to be lumped together. Ayliffe's Par.
Boccalini, in his political balance, after laying France in one ſcale, throws Spain into the other, which wanted but very little of being a counterpoize: the Spaniards upon this reckoned, that if Spain of itſelf weighed ſo well, they could not fail of ſucceeding when the ſeveral parts of the monarchy were lumped in the ſame ſcale. Addiſon.
- LU'MPISH. [lump and ſſh; lumpus, Lat.] A fort of fiſh.
- LU'MPING. adj. [from lump.] Large; heavy; great. A low word.

- LU'MPISH. adj. [from lump.] Heavy; groſs; dull; unactive; bulky.
- Out of the earth was formed the fleſh of man, and therefore heavy and lumpiſh. Raleigh's Hiſt. of the World.
Sylvia is lumpiſh, heavy, melancholy. Shakespeare.
Love is all ſpirit: fairies ſooner may Be taken tardy, when they night tricks play,
Than we; we are too dull and lumpiſh. Suckling.
Little terreſtrial particles ſwimming in it after the groſſeſt were funk down, which, by their heavineſs and lumpiſh figure, made their way more ſpeedily. Burnet.
How dull and how inſenſible a beaſt
Is man, who yet wou'd lord it o'er the reſt?
Philophers and poets vainly ſtrove
In every age the lumpiſh maſs to move. Dryden.
- LU'MPISHLY. adv. [from lumpiſh.] With heavineſs; with ſtupidity.
- LU'MPISHNESS. n. ſ. [from the adjective.] Stupid heavineſs.
- LU'MPY. adj. [from lump.] Full of lumps; full of compact maſſes.
One of the beſt ſpades to dig hard lumpy clays, but too ſmall for light garden mould. Mortimer's Huſbandry.
- LU'NACY. n. ſ. [from luna, the moon.] A kind of madneſs influenced by the moon; madneſs in general.
Love is merely madneſs, and deſerves as well a dark houſe and a whip as madmen do; and the reaſon why they are not ſo puniſhed and cured is, that the lunacy is ſo ordinary, that the whippers are in love too. Shakespeare. As you like it.

LUN

- Your kindred ſhun your houſe,
As beaten hence by your ſtrange lunacy. Shakespeare.
There is difference of lunacy: I had rather be mad with him, that, when he had nothing, thought all the ſhips that came into the haven his, than with you, who, when you have ſo much coming in, think you have nothing. Suckling.
- LU'NAR. ſ. adj. [lunaire, Fr. lunaris, Latin.] Relating to the moon; under the dominion of the moon.
They that have reſolved that theſe years were but lunary years, viz. of a month, or Egyptian years, are eaſily confuted. Raleigh's Hiſt. of the World.
They have denominated ſome herbs ſolar and ſome lunar, and ſuch like toys put into great words. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.
The figure of its ſeed much reſembles a horſhoe, which Baptiſta Porta hath thought too low a ſignification, and raiſed the ſame unto a lunary representation. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
We upon our globe's laſt verge ſhall go,
And view the ocean leaning on the ſky;
From thence our rolling neighbours we ſhall know,
And on the lunar world ſecurely pry. Dryden.
- LU'NARY. n. ſ. [lunaria, Latin; lunaire, Fr.] Moonwort.
Then ſprinkles ſhe the juice of rue
With nine drops of the midnight dew,
From lunary diſtilling. Drayton's Nymphid.
- LU'NATED. adj. [from luna.] Formed like a half moon.
- LU'NATIC. adj. [lunaticus, Latin.] Mad; having the imagination influenced by the moon.
Bedlam beggars, from low farms,
Sometimes with lunatick bans, ſometimes with prayers, Enforce their charity. Shakespeare.
- LU'NATICK. n. ſ. A madman.
The lunatick, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact:
One ſees more devils than vaſt hell can hold;
The madman. Shakespeare. Midſummer Night's Dream.
I dare enſure any man well in his wits, for one in the thouſand that he ſhall not die a lunatick in Bedlam within theſe ſeven years; becauſe not above one in about one thouſand five hundred have done ſo. Grant's Bills.
See the blind beggar dance, the cripple ſing,
The ſot a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.
The reſidue of the yearly profits ſhall be laid out in purchaſing a piece of land, and in building thereon an hoſpital for the reception of idiots and lunatics. Swift.
- LU'NATION. n. ſ. [lunation, French; lunas, Latin.] The revolution of the moon.
If the lunations be obſerved for a cycle of nineteen years, which is the cycle of the moon, the ſame obſervations will be verified for ſucceeding cycles for ever. Holder on Time.
- LUNCH. n. ſ. [Minshaw derives it from lunja, Spaniſh; luncheon, ſ. Schauer from kleinken, a ſmall piece, Teutonic. It probably comes from clunch or clunch.] As much food as one's hand can hold.
When hungry thou ſtood'ſt ſtaring, like an oaf,
I ſlic'd the luncheon from the barley loaf;
With crumbled bread I thick'n'd well the meſs. Gay.
- LUNE. n. ſ. [luna, Latin.]
1. Any thing in the ſhape of an half moon.
2. Fits of lunacy or frenzy, mad freaks. The French ſay of a man who is but fanciful or whimſical, Il a des lunes. Hammer.
- Beſtrew them
Theſe dangerous, unfaſe luns i' th' king;
He muſt be told on't, and he ſhall: the office Becomes a woman beſt. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
3. A laſh: as, the luns of a hawk.
- LUNETTE. n. ſ. [French.] A ſmall half moon.
Lunette is a covered place made before the courtine, which conſiſts of two faces that form an angle inwards, and is commonly raiſed in ſoſſes full of water, to ſerve inſtead of a fauſſe braye, and to diſpute the enemy's paſſage: it is fix toiles in extent, of which the parapet is four. Trevout.
- LUNGS. n. ſ. [lungen, Saxon; long, Dutch.] The lights; the part by which breath is inſpired and expired.
More would I, but my lungs are waſted ſo,
That ſtrength of ſpeech is utterly denied me. Shakespeare.
The bellows of his lungs begin to ſwell,
Nor can the good receive, nor bad expel. Dryden.
Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
And throats of brats inſpir'd with iron lungs;
I could not half thoſe horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the puniſhments thoſe crimes have met. Dryden.
- LUNGED. adj. [from lungs.] Having lungs; having the nature of lungs; drawing in and emitting air: as, the lungs in an animal body.
The ſmith prepares his hammer for the ſtroke,
While the lung'd bellows hiſſing fire provoke. Dryden.
- LUNG-GROWN. adj. [lung and grown.]
The lungs ſometimes grow faſt to the ſkin that lines the breaſt within; whence ſuch, as are detained with that accident are lung-grown. Harvey on Conſumptions.

LUR

- LU'NOWORT. n. ſ. [pulmonaria, Lat.]
The flower conſiſts of one leaf, which is ſhaped like a funnel, whoſe upper part is cut into ſeveral ſegments; from its fitulous flower-cup, which is for the moſt part pentagonal, riſes the pointal encompassed by four embryos, which afterwards become ſo many ſeeds incloſed in the flower-cup. Miller.
- LUNISO'LAR. adj. [lunifolaire, French; luna and ſolaris, Lat.] Compounded of the revolution of ſun and moon.
- LUNT. n. ſ. [lunte, Dutch.] The matchcord with which guns are fired.

It has a papilionaceous flower, out of whoſe empalement riſes the pale, which afterward turns into a pod filled with either plain or ſpherical ſeeds: the leaves grow like fingers upon the foot ſtalks. Miller.
When Protegenes would undertake any excellent piece, he uſed to diet himſelf with peas and lupines, that his invention might be quick and refined. Peacham on Drawing.
Where ſtalks of lupines grew,
Th' enſuing ſeaſon, in return, may bear
The bearded product of the golden year. Dryden's Georg.
Protegenes, drawing the picture of Jalyſus, took no other nourishment than lupines mixed with water, for fear of clogging his imagination by the luxury of his food. Dryden.
- LURCH. n. ſ. [This word is derived by Skinner from Pourche, a game of draughts, much uſed, as he ſays, among the Dutch; purche he derives from arca; ſo that, I ſuppoſe, thoſe that are loſt are left in lorche, in the lurch or box; whence the uſe of the word.]
To leave in the LURCH. To leave in a forlorn or deſerted condition; to leave without help.
Will you now to peace incline,
And languish in the main deſign,
And leave us in the lurch. Denham.
But though th' art of a different church,
I will not leave thee in the lurch. Hudibras, p. i.
Have a care how you keep company with thoſe that, when they find themſelves upon a pinch, will leave their friends in the lurch. L'Eſtrange's Fables.
Can you break your word with three of the honeſteſt beſt-meaning perſons in the world? It is baſe to take advantage of their ſimplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at laſt. Arbutnot's Hiſt. of F. Bull.
Flirts about town had a deſign to caſt us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by ſome of their late refinements. Addiſon's Guardian.
- TO LURCH. v. n. [heren, Dutch; or rather from the noun.]
1. To ſhift; to play tricks.
I myſelf, ſometimes leaving the fear of heav'n on my left-hand, and hiding mine honour in my neceſſity, am ſain to ſhuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shakespeare.
2. To lie in wait: we now rather uſe lurk.
While the one was upon wing, the other ſtood lurching upon the ground, and flew away with the fiſh. L'Eſtrange.
- TO LURCH. v. a. [lurcor, Latin.]
1. To devour; to ſwallow greedily.
Too far off from great cities may hinder buſineſs; or too near lurcheth all proviſions, and maketh every thing dear. Bacon's Eſſays.
2. To defeat; to diſappoint. A word now uſed only in burleſque. [from the game lurch.]
He waxed like a ſea;
And, in the brunt of ſeventeen battles ſince,
He lurcht all ſwords o' th' garland. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
God never deſigned the uſe of them to be continual; by putting ſuch an emptineſs in them, as ſhould ſo quickly fail and lurch the expectation. South's Sermons.
This is a ſure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the ſincere communicant. South's Sermons.
3. To ſteal privily; to filch; to pilfer.
- LUR'CHER. n. ſ. [from lurch.]
1. One that watches to ſteal, or to betray or entrap.
I cannot repreſent thoſe worthies more naturally than under the ſhadow of a pack of dogs, made up of finders, lurchers, and ſetters. Tatler, No. 59.
His thefts ſome tradesman piques,
Swift from his play the ſcudding lurcher flies;
Whilſt ev'ry honeſt tongue ſtop thief refunds. Gay.
2. [Lurce, Latin.] A glutton; a gormandizer. Not uſed.
- LURE. n. ſ. [lurre, French; lore, Dutch.]
1. Something held out to call a hawk.
My falcon now is ſharp and paſſing empty,
And, till ſhe ſtoop, the muſt not be full-gorg'd,
For then ſhe never looks upon her lure. Shakespeare.
This lure the cat abroad, thinking that this fame and be-lief would draw, at one time or other, ſome birds to ſtrike upon it. Bacon's Henry VII.
A great eſtate to an heir, is as a lure to all the birds of prey round about to ſeize on him. Bacon.

LUS

- A falc'ner Henry is, when Emma hawks;
With her of tarſels, and of lures he talks. Prior.
2. Any enticement; any thing that promiſes advantage.
How many have with a ſmile made ſmall account
Of beauty, and her lures, eaſily ſcorn'd
All her assaults, on worthier things intent. Milt. Par. Reg.
This ſtiffneck'd pride, nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to reaſon's lure deſcend. Denham.
- TO LURE. v. n. [from the noun.] To call hawks.
Standing near one that lured loud and thrill, I had ſudden-ly an offence, as if ſomewhat had broken, or been diſlocated in my ear, and immediately after a loud ringing. Bacon.
- TO LURE. v. a. To attract; to entice; to draw.
As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote, Againſt the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd, come flying, hur'd
With ſcent of living carcaſes. Milton's Par. Loſt.

From the fore although the insect flies,
It leaves a brood of maggots in disguise. Garth's Dispens.
2. Whimsy; caprice; odd fancy.
Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Three-pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:
I do forswear them.
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In russet yeas, and honest kerly noes. Shakespeare.
To reconcile our late dissenters,
Our brethren though by other venters,
Unite them and their different maggots,
As long and short sticks are in faggots. Hudibras, p. iii.
She prick'd his maggot, and touch'd him in the tender point; then he broke out into a violent passion. Arbutnot.
MAGGOTTINESS, n. f. [from maggot.] The state of abounding with maggots.
MAGGOTTY, adv. [from maggot.]
1. Full of maggots.
2. Capricious; whimsical.
To pretend to work out a neat scheme of thoughts with a maggoty unfetter'd head, is as ridiculous as to think to write fruit in a jumbling coach. Norris's Miscel.
MAGICAL, n. f. [from magick.] Acting, or performed by secret and invisible powers, either of nature, or the agency of spirits.
I'll humbly signify what, in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected. Shakespeare.
They beheld unveil'd the magical shield of your Ariosto, which dazzled the beholders with too much brightness; they can no longer hold up their arms. Dryden.
By the use of a looking-glass, and certain attire made of cambric, upon her head, she attained to an evil art and magical force in the motion of her eyes. Tatler, N^o. 110.
MAGICALLY, adv. [from magical.] According to the rites of magick.
In the time of Valens, divers curious men, by the falling of a ring magically prepared, judg'd that one Theodorus should succeed in the empire. Camden.
MAGICK, n. f. [magia, Latin.]
1. The art of putting in action the power of spirits: it was suppos'd that both good and bad spirits were subject to magick; yet magick was in general held unlawful; forcery; enchantment.
She once being loofe,
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony, Claps on his sea-wing. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
What charm, what magic, can over-rule the force of all these motives. Rogers.
2. The secret operations of natural powers.
The writers of natural magick do attribute much to the virtues that come from the parts of living creatures, as if they did infuse some immaterial virtue into the part fevered. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
MAGICK, adj. Acting or doing by powers superior to the known power of nature; incantating; necromantic.
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that distill'd by magick flights
Shall raise such artificial frights,
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and shake
Till all thy magick structures rear'd so high,
Were shatter'd into heaps. Milton.
Like castles built by magick art in air,
That vanish at approach, such thoughts appear. Granville.

MAG

- MAGICIAN, n. f. [magicus, Latin.] One skilled in magick; an enchanter; a necromancer.
What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
An old magician, that did keep
Th' Hesperian fruit, and made the dragon sleep;
Her potent charms do troubled souls relieve,
And, where the lifts, makes calmest souls to grieve. Waller.
There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know; as, whether Roger Bacon was a mathematician, or a magician. Locke.
MAGISTERIAL, adj. [from magister, Latin.]
1. Such as suits a master.
Such a frame of government is paternal, not magisterial. King Charles.
He bids him attend as if he had the rod over him; and uses a magisterial authority while he instructs him. Dryden.
2. Lofty; arrogant; proud; insolent; despotic.
We are not magisterial in opinions, nor, dictator like, obtrude our notions on any man. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Pretences go a great way with men that take fair words, and magisterial looks, for current payment. L'Estrange.
Those men are but trappan who are called to govern, being invested with authority, but bereaved of power; which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South's Sermon.
3. Chemically prepared, after the manner of a magistry.
Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magisterial salt, to good purpose in some fevers: the tincture is no more than a solution of the magisterial salt. Grew's Museum.
MAGISTERIALLY, n. f. [from magisterial.] Arrogantly; with an air of authority.
A downright advice may be mistaken, as if it were spoken magisterially. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Over their pots and pipes, claiming and engrossing all these wholly to themselves; magisterially censuring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all piety, and new modelling the world. South's Sermon.
MAGISTERIALNESS, n. f. [from magisterial.] Haughtiness; airs of a master.
Peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact: in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue.
MAGISTRY, n. f. [magisterium, Latin.]
Magistry is a term made use of by chemists to signify sometimes a very fine powder, made by solution and precipitation; as of bismuth, lead, &c. and sometimes refin'd and refulgent substances; as those of jalap, scamony, &c. but the most genuine acceptation is to express that preparation of any body, wherein the whole, or most part, is, by the addition of somewhat, changed into a body of quite another kind; as when iron or copper is turned into crystals of Mars or Venus. Quincy.
Paracelsus extracteth the magistry of wine, expelling it unto the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit be uncongealed in the centre. Brown.
The magistry of vegetables consists but of the more soluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.
MAGISTRACY, n. f. [magistratus, Latin.] Office or dignity of a magistrate.
You share the world, her magistracies, priesthoods, Wealth, and felicity, amongst you, friends. B. Johnson.
He had no other intention but to dissuade men from magistracy, or undertaking the public offices of state. Brown.
Some have disput'd even against magistracy itself. Athenian.
Duelling is not only an usurpation of the divine prerogative, but it is an insult upon magistracy and good government. Clarissa.
MAGISTRALLY, adv. [magistrally, low Latin.] Despotically; authoritatively; magisterially.
What a presumption is this for one, who will not allow liberty to others, to assume to himself such a license to controul so magistrally. Bishop Bramhall against Hobbes.
MAGISTRATE, n. f. [magistratus, Latin.] A man publicly invested with authority; a governor; an executor of the laws.
They chuse their magistrate!
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
I treat here of those legal punishments which magistrates inflict upon their disobedient subjects. Deacy of Piety.
MAGNALITY, n. f. [magnalia, Latin.] A great thing; something above the common rate. Not used.
Too greedy of magnalities, we make but favourable experiments concerning welcome truths. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
MAGNANIMITY, n. f. [magnanimitas, French; magnanimus, Latin.] Greatness of mind; bravery; elevation of soul.
With deadly hue, an armed corse did lye,
In whose dead face he read great magnanimity. Fa. Qu. Let.

MAG

- Let but the acts of the ancient Jews be but indifferently weigh'd, from whose magnanimity, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever hitherto match. Hooker, b. v.
They had enough reveng'd, having reduc'd
Their foe to misery beneath their fears,
The rest was magnanimity to remit,
If some convenient ransom was propos'd. Milton's Agonist.
Exploding many things under the name of trifles, is a very false proof either of wisdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame. Swift.
MAGNANIMOUS, adj. [magnanimus, Latin.] Great of mind; elevated in sentiment; brave.
To give a kingdom hath been thought Greater and nobler done, and to lay down
Far more magnanimous, than to refuse. Milton's Par. Reg.
In strength
All mortals I excell'd, and great in hopes,
With youthful courage and magnanimous thoughts
Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits. Milton.
Magnanimous industry is a resolved assiduity and care, answerable to any weighty work. Grew's Cofinal.
MAGNANIMOUSLY, adv. [from magnanimous.] Bravely; with greatness of mind.

And tell the nations in no vulgar strain,
What wars I manage, and what wreaths I gain. Prior.
2. To train a horse to graceful action.
He rode up and down gallantly mounted, managing his horse, and charging and discharging his lance. Knolles.
3. To govern; to make tractable.
They vault from hunters to the manag'd reed. Young.
- Let us stick to our point, and we will manage Bull I'll warrant you. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
4. To wield; to move or use easily.
Long tubes are cumbersome, and scarce to be easily ma- naged. Newton.
5. To husband; to make the object of caution.
There is no more to manage! If I fall,
It shall be like myself; a setting sun
Should leave a track of glory in the skies. Dryden.
- The less he had to lose, the less he car'd,
To manage loathsome life, when love was the reward. Dryd.
6. To treat with caution or decency: this is a phrase merely Gallick; not to be imitated.
Notwithstanding it was so much his interest to manage his protestant subjects in the country; he made over his principality to France. Addison on Italy.
- To MANAGE, v. n. To superintend affairs; to transact;
Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant
What their unerring wisdom fees thee want. Dryden.
- MANAGE*, v. a. [manège, French.]
1. Conduct; administration.
To him put
The manage of my state. Shakespeare's Tempest.
- This might have been prevented,
With very easy arguments of love,
Which now the manage of two kingdoms must With fearful, bloody issue arbitrate. Shakespeare's K. John.
- For the rebels which stand out in Ireland,
Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
Ere further leisure yield them further means. Shakespeare.
- Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, and stir more than they can quit. Bacon's Essays.
- The plea of a good intention will serve to sanctify the worst actions; the proof of which is but too manifest from that scandalous doctrine of the jesuits concerning the direction of the intention, and likewise from the whole manage of the late rebellion. South's Sermons.
- Whenever we take a strong bias, it is not out of a moral incapacity to do better, but for want of a careful manage and discipline to set us right at first. L'Estrange's Fables.
2. Use; instrumentality.
To think to make gold of quicksilver is not to be hoped;
for quicksilver will not endure the manage of the fire. Bacon.
3. Government of a horse.
In thy slumbers
I heard thee murmur tales of iron wars,
Speak terms of manage to the bounding steed. Shakespeare.
- The horse you must draw in his career with his manage and turn, doing the curvetto. Peacham.
- MANAGEABLE*, adj. [from manage.]
1. Easy in the use; not difficult to be wielded or moved.
The conditions of weapons and their improvement are,
that they may serve in all weathers; and that the carriage may be light and manageable. Bacon's Essays.
- Very long tubes are, by reason of their length, apt to bend, and shake by bending so as to cause a continual trembling in the objects, whereas by contrivance the glasses are readily manageable. Newton's Opticks.
2. Governable; tractable.
MANAGEABLENESS, n. f. [from manageable.]
1. Accommodation to easy use.
This disagreement may be imputed to the greater or less exactness or manageableness of the instruments employed. Boyle.
2. Tractableness; easiness to be governed.
MANAGEMENT, n. f. [management, French.]
1. Conduct; administration.
Mark with what management their tribes divide;
Some stick to you, and some to t'other side. Dryden.
- An ill argument introduced with deference, will procure more credit than the profoundest science with a rough, insolent, and noisy management. Locke on Education.
- The wrong management of the earl of Godolphin was the only cause of the union. Swift's Miscel.
2. Practice; transaction; dealing.
He had great managements with ecclesiastics in the view of being advanced to the pontificate. Addison on Italy.
- MANAGER*, n. f. [from manage.]
1. One who has the conduct or direction of any thing.
A skilful manager of the rabble, so long as they have but ears to hear, needs never enquire whether they have any understanding. South's Sermons.

MAN

- The manager opens his sluice every night, and distributes the water into the town. Addison.
- An artful manager, that crept between His friend and flame, and was a kind of screen. Pope.
2. A man of frugality; a good husband.
A prince of great aspiring thoughts: in the main, a ma- nager of his treasure, and yet bountiful, from his own motion, wherever he discerns merit. Temple's Miscel.
- The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of Ovid's wit; though he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.
- MANAGERY*, n. f. [menagerie, French.]
1. Conduct; direction; administration.
They who most exactly describe that battle, give to fill an account of any conduct or discretion in the manager of that affair, that posterity would receive little benefit in the most particular relation of it. Clarendon, l. viii.
2. Husbandry; frugality.
The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good manager, that it is not credible crowns are conferred gratis. Deacy of Play.
3. Manner of using.
No expert general will bring a company of raw, untrained men into the field, but will, by little bloodless skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight, and teach them the ready manager of their weapons. Deacy of Play.
- MANATION*, n. f. [manatio, Latin.] The act of issuing from something else.
MANCHE, n. f. [French.] A sleeve.
MANCHET, n. f. [michet, French; Skinner.] A small loaf of fine bread.
Take a small toast of manchet, dipped in oil of sweet almonds. Bacon.
- I love to entertain my friends with a frugal collation; a cup of wine, a dish of fruit, and a manchet. Morley's Diet.
- MANCHINEEL*, n. f. [manacilla, Latin.]
The manchineel tree has male flowers, or katkins, which are produced at remote distances from embryos, which become round fleshy fruit, in which is contained a tough woody nut, inclosing four or five flat seeds: it is a native of the West Indies, and grows equal to the size of an oak; its wood, which is fawn out into planks, and brought to England, is of a beautiful grain, will polish well and last long, and is therefore much esteemed in cabinet-makers work: in cutting down those trees, the juice of the bark, which is of a milky colour, must be burnt out before the work is begun; for its nature is so corrosive, that it will raise blisters on the skin, and burn holes in linen; and if it should happen to fall into the eyes of the labourers, they are in danger of losing their sight: the fruit is of the colour and size of the golden pippen, by which many Europeans have been deceived; some of whom have greatly suffered, and others lost their lives by eating it, which will corrode the mouth and throat: the leaves of these trees also abound with a milky juice of the same nature, so that the cattle never shelter themselves under them, and scarcely will any vegetable grow under their shade;
yet the goats eat this fruit without any injury. Miller.
- To MANCIPATE, v. a. [mancipio, Latin.] To enslave; to bind; to tie.
Although the regular part of nature is seldom varied, yet the meteors, which are in themselves more unstable, and less mancipated to stated motions, are oftentimes employed to various ends. Hale's Origin of Manhood.
- MANCIPATION*, n. f. [from mancipate.] Slavery; involuntary obligation.
MANCIPLE, n. f. [mancept, Latin.] The steward of a community; the purveyor: it is particularly used of the purveyor of a college.
Their manciple fell dangerously ill,
Bread must be had, their gift went to the mill:
This skimkin moderately stole before,
Their steward sick, he robb'd them ten times more. Betterton's Miller of Trompington.
- MANDAMUS*, n. f. [Latin.] A writ granted by the king, so called from the initial word.
MANDARIN, n. f. A Chinese nobleman or magistrate.
MANDATARY, n. f. [mandataire, Fr. from mandat, Latin.]
He to whom the pope has, by virtue of his prerogative, and his own proper right, given a mandate for his benediction. Ayliffe's Parergon.
- MANDATE*, n. f. [mandatum, Latin.]
1. Command.
Her force is not any where so apparent as in express man- dates or prohibitions, especially upon advice and consultation going before. Hosker, b. i.
- The necessity of the times cast the power of the three estates upon himself, that his mandates should pass for laws, whereby he laid what taxes he pleased. Hosker's Vocal Forest.
2. Precept; charge; commission, sent or transmitted.
Who

MAN

- Who knows,
If the scarce bearded Cæsar have not sent His powerful mandate to you. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
- This Moor,
Your special mandate, for the state affairs,
Hath hither brought. Shakespeare's Othello.
- He thought the mandate forg'd, your death conceal'd. Dryd.
- This dream all powerful Juno sends, I bear
Her mighty mandates, and her words you hear:
Haste, arm your Arceans. Dryden's Æn.
- MANDATOR*, n. f. [Latin.] Director.
A person is said to be a client to his advocate, but a master and mandator to his proctor. Ayliffe's Parergon.
- MANDATORY*, adj. [mandare, Latin.] Preceptive; directory.
MANDIBLE, n. f. [mandibula, Latin.] The jaw; the instrument of manducation.
He saith, only the crocodile moveth the upper jaw, as if the upper mandible did make an articulation with the cranium. Grew's Museum.
- MANDIBULAR*, n. f. [from mandibula, Latin.] Belonging to the jaw.
MANDILION, n. f. [mandigliano, Italian.] A soldier's coat.
Skinner. A loose garment; a sleeveless jacket. Ains.
- MANDREL*, n. f. [mandrin, French.]
Mandrels are made with a long wooden shank, to fit stiff into a round hole that is made in the work, that is to be turned; this mandrel is called a shank, or pin-mandrel: and if the hole the shank is to fit into be very small, and the work to be fastened on it pretty heavy, then turners fasten a round iron shank or pin, and fasten their work upon it.
Mason's Mechanical Exercises.
- MANDRAKE*, n. f. [mandragora, Lat. mandragora, Fr.]
The flower of the mandrake consists of one leaf in the shape of a bell, and is divided at the top into several parts;
the point afterwards becomes a globular soft fruit, in which are contained many kidney-shaped seeds: the roots of this plant is said to bear a resemblance to the human form. The reports of tying a dog to this plant, in order to root it up, and prevent the certain death of the person who dares to attempt such a deed, and of the groans emitted by it when the violence is offered, are equally fabulous. Miller.
- Among other virtues, mandrakes has been falsely celebrated for rendering barren women fruitful: it has a soporific quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted a nar-cotick of the most powerful kind. Hill's Mat. Med.
- Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
As curls, as harsh, and horrible to hear. Shakespeare.
- Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cline thee to that sweet sleep. Shakespeare.
- And shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad. Shakespeare.
- Give me of thy sons mandrakes. Gen. xxx. 14.
- Go, and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root. Dehne.
- To MANDUCATE, v. a. [manduco, Lat.] To chew; to eat.
MANDUCATION, n. f. [manducatio, Latin.] Eating.
Manducation is the action of the lower jaw in chewing the food, and preparing it in the mouth before it is received into the stomach. Quincy.
- As he who is not a holy person does not feed upon Christ, it is apparent that our manducation must be spiritual, and therefore so must the food, and consequently it cannot be natural flesh. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
- MANE*, n. f. [maene, Dutch.] The hair which hangs down on the neck of horses, or other animals.
Dametas was tossed from the saddle to the mane of the horse, and thence to the ground. Sidney, b. ii.
- A currie comb, mane comb, and whip for a jade. Tupper.
- The weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cressida.
- The horses breaking loose, ran up and down with their tails and manes on a light-fire. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
- A lion shakes his dreadful mane,
And angry grows. Waller.

They grasp'd with all their strength the manes. Hudibras.
- MANEATER*, n. f. [man and eat.] A cannibal; an anthro-phagite; one that feeds upon human flesh.
MANED, adj. [from the noun.] Having a mane.
MANES, n. f. [Latin.] Ghost; shade; that which remains of man after death.
Hail, O ye holy manes! hail again
Paternal ashes. Dryden's Virg.
- MANFUL*, adj. [man and full.] Bold; stout; daring.
It had devour'd 'twas manful. Hudibras.
- MANFULLY*, adv. [from manful.] Boldly; stoutly.

MAN

- Artimelia behaved herself manfully in a great fight 'at sea;
when Xerxes stood by as a coward. Abbot.
- I slew him manfully in fight. Shakespeare.
- Without false 'vantage, or base treachery.
He that with this Christian armour manfully fights against,
and repels, the temptations and assaults of his spiritual enemies; he that keeps his conscience void of offence, shall enjoy peace here, and for ever. Ray on Creation.
- MANFULNESS*, n. f. [from manful.] Stoutness; boldness.
MANGCOORN, n. f. [mengen, Dutch, to mingle.] Corn of several kinds mixed: as, wheat and rye.
- MANGANESE*, n. f. [manganesia, low Latin.] Manganese is extremely well known by name, though the gallian use it for many different substances, that have the same effect in clearing the foul colour of their glass: it is properly an iron ore of a poorer sort; the most perfect sort is of a dark iron grey, very heavy but brittle. Hill.
- Manganese* is rarely found but in an iron vein. Woodward.
- MANGE*, n. f. [de manger, French.] The itch or scab in cattle.

to keep the horses from their provender. L'Estrange's Fab.
- MANGINESS*, n. f. [from mangy.] Scabbiness; infection with the mange.
To MANGLE, v. a. [mangler, Dutch, to be wanting; man- cus, Latin.] To lacerate; to cut or tear piece-meal; to butcher.
Cassio, may you suspect
Who they should be, that thus have mangled you? Shak.
- Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakespeare.
- Thoughts my tormentors arm'd with deadly stings,
Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb,
Or medicinal liquor can alluage. Milton's Agonistes.
- The triple porter of the Stygian seat,
With lolling tongue, lay fawning at thy feet,
And, seiz'd with fear, forgot his mangled meat. Dryden.
- What could swords or poison, racks or flame,
But mangle and disjoint this brittle frame?
More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's fame. Prior.
- It is hard, that not one gentleman's daughter should read or understand her own natural tongue; as any one may find, who can hear them when they are disposed to mangle a play or a novel, where the least word out of the common road disconcerts them. Swift to a young Lady.
- They have joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel, only to shorten a syllable; so that most of the books we see now-a-days, are full of those manglings and abbreviations. Swift's Let. to the Ld. Treasurer.
- Inextricable difficulties occur by mangling the sense, and cutting authors. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
- MANGLER*, n. f. [from mangle.] A hacker; one that destroys bunglingly.
Since after thee may rise an impious line,
Coarse manglers of the human face divine,
Paint on, till fate dissolve thy mortal part,
And live and die the monarch of thy art. Tickell.
- MANGO*, n. f. [mangosha, Fr.] A fruit of the isle of Java, brought to Europe pickled.
The fruit with the hulk, when very young, makes a good preserve, and is used to pickle like mangoes. Mortimer.
- What lord of old would bid his cook prepare Mangos, potatges, champignons, cavaire. King.
- MANGY*, adj. [from mangy.] Infected with the mange; scabby.
Away, thou filth of a mangy dog!
I swoon to see thee. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
- MANHATER*, n. f. [man and hater.] One that hates mankind.
MANHOOD, n. f. [from man.]
1. Human nature.
In Seth was the church of God established; from whom Christ descended, as touching his manhood. Raleigh.
- Not therefore joins the son
Manhood to Godhead, with more strength to foil Thy enemy. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
- 'Tis in my power to be a sovereign now,
And, knowing more, to make his manhood bow. Dryden.

He moves with manly grace. Dryden's Æn.
MAN'LY. adv. [from man.] With courage like a man.
MAN'NA. n. f.
Manna is properly a gum, and is honey-like juice concreted into a solid form, seldom so dry but it adheres more or less to the fingers in handling: its colour is whitish, yellowish, or brownish, and it has in taste the sweetness of fu-gar, and with it a sharpness that renders it very agreeable:
we are supplied with manna from Calabria and Sicily, which is the product of two different trees, but which are of the same genus, being both varieties of the ash: when the heats of summer are free from rain, the leaves, the trunks, and branches of both these trees, exude a white honey juice, which concretes into what we call manna, forming itself as it runs, and according to its different quantity, into small roundish drops, or long flakes: what flows out of the leaves of these trees is all natural, but the Italians procure a forced kind by wounding the trunks and branches: the finest manna of all is that which oozes naturally out of the leaves in August, after the season of collecting the common manna is over: the French have another sort of manna, produced from the

MAN

the larch tree, of a very different genus of the ash, and the very tree which produces oil of turpentine; this is called Briançon manna, from the country where it is produced: our black thorn, or loc tree, sometimes yield a true manna from the ribs of the leaves in Autumn, but it is in a very small quantity: there is another sort called the manna Persa, produced from a small prickly shrub about four or five feet high, growing in Egypt, Armenia, Georgia, and Persia. The Hebrews, who had been acquainted with the last mentioned sort of manna, when they found a miraculous food in the desert resembling it, did not scruple to call it manna: this was a conjecture the more natural to them, as they saw plainly that this descended from the heavens in form of a dew, and concreted into the globules in which they found it; and the received opinion at that time was, that the Oriental manna was formed in the same manner; that it was a dew from the clouds concreted on the plant, none supposing, in those early times, that it was the natural juice of the shrub upon which it was found: it is however evident, that this was not of the nature of manna, because it melted away as the sun grew hot, whereas manna hardens in that heat. It is but lately that the world were convinced of the mistake of manna being an aerial produce, by an experiment being made by covering a tree with sheets in the manna season, and the finding as much manna on it afterwards as on those which were open to the air and dew. Manna is celebrated, both by the ancients and moderns, as a gentle and mild cathartick. Hill.
It would be well inquired, whether manna doth fall but upon certain herbs, or leaves only. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The manna in heaven will suit every man's palate. Locke.
MANNER. n. f. [maniere, French.]
1. Form; method.
In my divine Emilia make me best.
Find thou the manner, and the means prepare,
Possession, more than conquest, is my care. Dryden.
2. Custom; habit; fashion.
As the manner of some is. New Testament.
3. Certain degree.
It is in a manner done already;
For many carriages he hath dispatch'd
To the sea-side. Shakespeare's King John.
The bread is in a manner common. 1 Sam. xxi. 5.
If the envy be general in a manner upon all the ministers of an estate, it is truly upon the state itself. Bacon's Essays.
This universe we have possess'd, and rul'd
In a manner at our will, th' affairs of earth. Paradise Reg.
Antony Augustinus does in a manner confess the charge.
Baker's Reflections on Learning.
4. Sort; kind.
All manner of men assembled here in arms against God's peace and the king's: we charge you to repair to your dwelling-places. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. i.
A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable,
Beyond all manner of fo much I love you. Shakespeare.
What manner of men were they whom ye slew? Judges.
The city may flourish in trade, and all manner of outward advantages. Atterbury.
5. Mien; cast of the look.
Air and manner are often more expressive than words.
Clarissa.
Some men have a native dignity in their manner, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands. Clarissa.
6. Peculiar way.
If I melt into melancholy while I write, I shall be taken in the manner; and I fit by one too tender to these impressions. Dante's Letters.
It can hardly be imagined how great a difference was in the humour, disposition, and manner, of the army under Essex, and the other under Waller. Clarendon, b. viii.
Some few touches of your lordship, which I have endeavoured to express after your manner, have made whole poems of mine to pass with approbation. Dryden's Juu.
As man is known by his company, so a man's company may be known by his manner of expressing himself. Swift.
7. Way; fort.
The temptations of prosperity insinuate themselves after a gentle, but very powerful, manner. Atterbury.
8. Character of the mind.
His princes are as much distinguished by their manners as by their dominions; and even those among them, whose characters seem wholly made up of courage, differ from one another as to the particular kinds. Addison.
9. Manners in the plural. General way of life; morals; habits.
The kinds of music have most operation upon manners: as, to make them warlike; to make them soft and effeminate. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 114.
Every fool carries more or less in his face the signature of his manners, though more legible in some than others. L'Estrange's Fables.

MAN

We bring our manners to the blest abodes;
And think what pleases us must please the gods. Dryden.
10. [In the plural.] Ceremonious behaviour; studied civility.
The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urge. Shakespeare's King Lear.
These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,
That so neglected you. Shakespeare's Othello.
Our griefs and not our manners reason now. Shakespeare.
Ungracious wretch,
Fit for the mountains and the barbarous caves,
Where manners ne'er were preach'd. Shakespeare.
Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manner; Kate. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Good manners bound her to invite Dryden.
The stranger dame to be her guest that night.
None but the careless and the confident would rush rudely into the presence of a great man: and shall we, in our applications to the great God; take that to be religion, which the common reason of mankind will not allow to be manners? South's Sermons.
Your passion bends
Its force against your nearest friends;
Which manners, decency, and pride,
Have taught you from the world to hide. Swift.
MAN'NERLINESS. n. f. [from mannerly.] Civility; ceremonious compliance.
Others out of mannerliness and respect to God, though they deny this universal foul of the universe, yet have devised several systems of the universe. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
MAN'NERLY. adj. [from manner.] Civil; ceremonious; complaisant.
Tut, tut; here is a mannerly forbearance. Shakespeare.
Let me have
What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly. Shakespeare.
Fools make a mock at sin, affront the God whom we serve, and vilify religion; not to oppose them, by whatever mannerly names we may palliate the offence, is not modesty but cowardice, and a traitorous desertion of our allegiance to Christ. Rogers's Sermons.
MAN'NERLY. adv. Civilly; without rudeness.
When we've sup'd,
We'll mannerly demand thee of thy story. Shakespeare.
MAN'NIKIN. n. f. [man and klein, German.] A little man; a dwarf.
MAN'NISH. adj. [from man.] Having the appearance of a man; bold; masculine; impudent.
Nature had proportioned her without any fault; yet altogether seem'd not to make up that harmony that Cupid delights in; the reason whereof might seem a manish countenance, which overthrew that lovely sweetness, the noblest power of womankind, far fitter to prevail by parley than by battle. Sidney.
A woman, impudent and manish grown,
Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man. Shakespeare.
When manish Mevia, that two-handed whore, Altride on horseback hunts the Tuscan boar. Dryden.
MANOR. n. f. [manoir, old French; manerium, low Latin;
maner, Armorick.]
Manor signifies, in common law, a rule or government which a man hath over such as hold land within his fee. Touching the original of these manors, it seems, that, in the beginning, there was a certain compass or circuit of ground granted by the king to some men of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction, more or less, within that compass; as he thought good to grant; performing him such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required: and that afterward this great man parcelled his land to other meaner men, in-joining them again such services and rents as he thought good; and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, so the inferiors became tenants to him: but those great men, or their posterity, have alienated these manors and lands so given them by their prince, and many for capital offences have forfeited them to the king; and thereby they still remain in the crown, or are bestowed again upon others. But whosoever possesses these manors, the liberty belonging to them is real and predial, and therefore remains, though the owners be changed. In these days, a manor rather signifies the jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site:
for a man may have a manor in gross, as the law terms it, that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereto belonging. Covel.
My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
Ev'n now forsake me; and of all my lands
Is nothing left me. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Kinmen of mine,
By this so sick'n'd their estates, that never They shall abound as formerly. O many spirit and milder sex, to wit, a woman. Carew.

MANSE. n. f. [manſe, Latin.] A parsonage house.
MANSTON. n. f. [manſo, Latin.]
1. Place of residence; abode; house.
All these are but ornaments of that divine spark within you, which being defended from heaven, could not elsewhere pick out so sweet a manſion. Sidney.
A fault no less grievous, if so be it were true, than if some king should build his manſion-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker, b. v.
To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His manſion, and his titles in a place,
From whence himself does fly? he loves us not. Shakeſp.
Thy manſion wants thee, Adam, rise
First man, of men innumerable ordain'd;
First father! call'd by thee, I come thy guide
To the garden of bliss, thy seat prepar'd. Milton.
A manſion is provided thee; more fair
Than this, and worthy heav'n's peculiar care,
Not fram'd of common earth. Dryden.
2. Residence; abode.
These poets near our princes sleep,
And in one grave their manſions keep. Denham.
MANSLAUGHTER. n. f. [man and slaughter.]
1. Murder; destruction of the human species.
The whole pleasure of that book standeth in open man- slaughter and bold bawdry.
To overcome in battle, and subdue
Nations, and bring home spoils, with infinite Manſlaughter, shall be held the highest pitch
Of human glory. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. xi.

then it might be thought the effect of curation or institution, but also in the wild. Ray on Creation.
MANSUETUDE. n. f. [manſuetudo, French; manſuetudo, Lat.]
Tameſs; gentleness.
The angry lion did present his paw,
Which by consent was given to manſuetude;
The fearful hare her ears, which by their law Humility did reach to fortitude. Herbert.
MANTEL. n. f. [mantel, old Fr.] Work raised before a chimney to conceal it, whence the name, which originally signifies a cloak.
From the Italians we may learn how to raise fair mantels within the rooms, and how to disguise the shafts of chimnies. Wotton's Architecture.
If you break any china on the mantelſtee or cabinet, gather up the fragments. Swift.
MANTELET. n. f. [manlelet, French.]
1. A small cloak worn by women.
2. [In fortification.] A kind of moveable penthouse, made of pieces of timber lawed into planks, which being about three inches thick, are nailed one over another to the height of almost six feet: they are generally caſed with tin, and set upon little wheels; so that in a siege they may be driven before the pioneers, and serve as blinds to shelter them from the enemy's small-shot: there are other mantellets covered on the top, whereof the miners make use to approach the walls of a town or castle. Harris.
MANTIGER. n. f. [man and tiger.] A large monkey or baboon.
Near these was placed, by the black prince of Monomotapas's side, the glaring cat-a-mountain, and the man-mimicking mantiger. Arbutn. and Pope.
MANTLE. n. f. [mantell, Welſh.] A kind of cloak or garment thrown over the rest of the drefs.
We, well-cover'd with the night's black mantles,
At unawares may beat down Edward's guard,
And seize himself. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Poor Tom drinks the green mantle of the standing pool.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whole pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth. Shakespeare.
Their actions were covered and disguised with mantles, very useful in times of disorder, of religion and justice.
Hayward's Edward VI.
The herald and children are clothed with mantles of water green fatten; but the herald's mantle is stream'd with gold. Bacon's New Atlantis.

MAN

Before the heav'n thou wert, and at the voice
Of God, as with a mantle, didst invest
The rising world of waters dark and deep,
Won from the void and formless infinite. Milton.
By which the beauty of the earth appears,
The divers-colour'd mantle which she wears. Sandy.
Upon loosening of his mantle the eggs fell from him at unawares, and the eagle was a third time defeated. L'Eſtrange.
Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has weav'd
A filken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours: gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress,
And Venus shall the texture bless. Prior.
A spacious veil from his broad shoulders flew,
That set the unhappy Phaeton to view;
The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd,
And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd. Addison.
To MAN'TLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloke; to cover;
to disguise.
As the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness; so their rising senses
Begin to chace the ign'rant fumes, that mantle
Their clearer reason. Shakespeare's Tempest.
I left them
I th' filthy mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to th' chins. Shakespeare's Tempest.
To MAN'TLE. v. n. [The original of the signification of this word is not plain. Skinner considers it as relative to the expansion of a mantle: as, the hawk mantleth; she spreads her wings like a mantle.]
1. To spread the wings as a hawk in pleasure.
The swan with arch'd neck,
Between her white wings mantling, rows
Her state with oary feet. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. viii.
2. To joy; to revel.
My frail fancy fed with full delight
Doth bathe in bliss, and mantleth most at ease;
Ne thinks of other heaven, but how it might
Her heart's desire with most contentment please. Spenser.
3. To be expanded; to spread luxuriantly.
The pair that clad
Each shoulder broad, came mantling o'er his breast
With regal ornament. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. v.
The mantling vine
Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps Luxuriant. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. iv.
I saw them under a green mantling vine,
That crawls along the side of yon small hill,
Plucking ripe clusters. Milton.
You'll sometimes meet a fop, of niceſt tread,
Whose mantling peruke veils his empty head. Gey.
He with the Nais went to dwell,
Leaving the nectar'd feasts of Jove;
And where his mazy waters flow,
He gave the mantling vine, to grow
A trophy to his love. Penton's Ode to Lord Gower.
4. To gather any thing on the surface; to froth.
There are a fort of men, whose viſages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit. Shakespeare.
It drinketh fresh, flowereth, and mantleth exceedingly. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. No. 46.
From plate to plate your eye-balls roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl. Pope's Horace.
5. To ferment; to be in sprightly agitation.
When mantling blood
Flow'd in his lovely cheeks; when his bright eyes
Spark'd with youthful fires; when ev'ry grace Shone in the father, which now crowns the son. Smith.
MAN'TUA. n. f. [this is perhaps corrupted from mantua, Fr.]
A lady's gown.
Not Cynthia, when her mantua's pinn'd awry,
E'er felt such rage, resentment, and despair,
As thou, sad virgin! for thy ravish'd hair. Pope.
How naturally do you apply your hands to each other's lappets, ruffles, and mantuas. Swift.
MAN'TUAMAKER. n. f. [mantua and maker.] One who makes

We find no open tract, or constant manuduction, in this labyrinth. Preface to Brown's Vulgar Errors.
That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident from the constant steadiness and regularity of their motion. Glanville.
This is a direct manuduction to all kind of sin, by abusing the conscience with undervaluing persuasions concerning the malignity and guilt even of the foulest. South's Sermons.
MANUFACTURE. n. f. [manus and facio, Latin; manufacture, French.]
1. The practice of making any piece of workmanship.
2. Any thing made by art.
Heav'n's pow'r is infinite: earth, air, and sea,
The manufacture maſs the making pow'r obey. Dryden.
The peasants are clothed in a coarse kind of canvas, the manufacture of the country. Addison on Italy.
To MANUFACTURE. v. a. [manufacturer, French.] To make by art and labour; to form by workmanship.
MANUFACTURER. n. f. [manufacturier, French; manufacturist, Lat.] A workman; an artificer.
In the practices of artificers and the manufacturers of various kinds, the end being proposed, we find out ways of composing things for the several uses of human life. Watts.
To MANUFACTURE. v. a. [manumitto, Latin.] To set free; to dismiss from slavery.
A constant report of a dagger so eminent run through the whole castle, even into the deep dungeons, by the compa-sion of certain manumitted slaves. Kneller's Hiſt. of the Turks.
He presents
To thee renown'd for piety and force,
Poor captives manumitted, and matchless horſe. Waller.
MANUMISSION. n. f. [manumission, Fr. manumissio, Lat.] The act of giving liberty to slaves.
Slaves wore iron rings until their manumission or preferment. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
The pileus was somewhat like a night-cap, as the symbol of liberty, and therefore given to slaves at their manumission.
Arbutnot on Coins.
To MANUMIT. v. a. [manumitto, Latin.] To release from slavery.
Help to manumit and release him from those servile drudge-ries to vice, under which those remain who live without God. Government of the Tongue.
Thou wilt beneath the burthen bow,
And glad receive the manumitting blow
On thy shav'd slavish head. Dryden's Juvenal.
MANURABLE. adj. [from manure.] Capable of cultivation.
This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every maſor. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
MANURANCE. n. f. [from manure.] Agriculture; cultivation.
An obsolete word, worthy of revival.
Although there should none of them fall by the sword, yet they being kept from manurance, and their cattle from running abroad, by this hard restraint they would quickly devour one another. Spenser on Ireland.
To MANURE. v. a. [manuerver, French.]
1. To cultivate by manual labour.
They mock our scant manuring, and require More hands than ours to lop their wanton growth. Milt.
2. To dung; to fatten with composts.
Fragments of shells, reduced by the agitation of the sea to powder, are used for the manuring of land. Woodward.
Revenge her slaughter'd citizens,
Or share their fate: the corps of half her senate Manure the fields of Thessaly, while we Sit here, deliberating in cold debates. Addison's Cato.
MANURE. n. f. [from the verb.] Soil to be laid on lands;
dung or compost to fatten land.
When the Nile from Pharian fields is fled,
The fat manure with heav'nly fire is warm'd. Dryden.

MAN

Mud makes an extraordinary manure for land that is sandy.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
MANUREMENT. n. f. [from manure.] Cultivation; improvement.
The manurement of wits is like that of soils, where before the pains of tilling or sowing, men consider what the mould will bear. Wotton on Education.
MANURER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who manures land; a husbandman.
MANUSCRIPT. n. f. [manuſcrit, Fr. manuscriptum, Latin.] A book written, not printed.
A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Ara-bick, and fought in the most remote parts by the diligence of Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, were upon sale to the jesuits. Wotton.
Her majesty has perused the manuscript of this opera, and given it her approbation. Dryden's Dedication to K. Arthur.
MAN'Y. adj. comp. more, superl. most. [mænz; Saxon.]
1. Consisting of a great number; numerous; more than few.
Our enemy, and the destroyers of our country, flew many of us. Judg. xvi. 24.
When many atoms descend in the air, the same cause which makes them be many, makes them be light in proportion to their multitude. Diſt. on the Soul.
The apostles never give the least directions to Christians to appeal to the bishop of Rome for a determination of the many differences which, in those times, happened among them. Tillotson's Sermons.
2. Marking number indefinite.
Both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, brought bracelets. Exod. xxxv. 22.
3. Powerful; with too, and in low language.
They come to vie power and expence with those that are too high, and too many, for them. L'Eſtrange's Fables.
MAN'Y. n. f. [This word is remarkable in the Saxon for its frequent use, being written with twenty variations: mænegeo, mænezo, mænizego, manigo, mænizu, mænio, mænu, mænizego, mænizego, manizu, manize, manigo, me-nezeo, mænizego, mænizego, mænizego, mænizu, me-nio, mænizu.]
1. A multitude; a company; a great number; people.
After him the rascal many ran,
Heaped together in rude rabblement. Fairy Queen.
O thou fond many! with what loud applause
Didst thou beat heav'n with blessing Bolingbroke. Shakeſp.
I had a purpose now
To lead our many to the holy land;
Left rest and lying still might make them look Too near into my state. Shakeſp. Henry IV.
A care-craz'd mother of a many children. Shakespeare.
The vulgar and the many are fit only to be led or driven, but by no means fit to guide themselves. South's Sermons.
There parting from the king the chiefs divide,
And wheeling East and West, before their many ride. Dryd.
He is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment of his life. Tillotson's Sermons.
Seeing a great many in rich gowns, he was amazed to find that persons of quality were up so early. Addison's Frecholder.
2. Many, when it is used before a singular noun, seems to be a substantive.
Thou art a collop of my flesh;
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear. Shakespeare.
He is beset with enemies, the meanest of which is not without many and many a way to the wreaking of a malice.
L'Eſtrange's Fables.
Broad were their collars too, and every one
Was set about with many a costly stone. Dryden.
Many a child can have the distinct clear ideas of two and three long before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.
3. Many is used much in composition.
MANYCOLOURED. adj. [many and colour.] Having many colours.
Hail manycoloured messenger, that ne'er Do'st disobey the voice of Jupiter. Shakeſp. Tempest.
He hears not me, but on the other side
A manycolour'd peacock having spy'd,
Leaves him and me. Donne.
The hoary majesty of spades appears;
Puts forth one manly leg, to fight reveal'd,
The rest his manycoloured robe conceal'd. Pope.
MANYCORNED. adj. [many and corner.] Polygonal; having many corners.
Search those manycorned minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds. Dryden.
MANYHEADED. adj. [many and head.] Having many heads.
Some of the wiser feeling that a popular licence is indeed the manyheaded tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Mus-dorus their chief. Sidney, b. iii.
The proud Dussla came High mounted on her manyheaded beast. Fairy Queen.
The

MAR

The manyheaded beast hath broke,
Or shaken from his head, the royal yoke.
Those were the preludes of his fate,
That form'd his manhood to subdue
The hydra of the manyheaded hissing crew.
MANYLANGUED. adj. [many and language.] Having many languages.
Seek Atides on the Spartan shore;
He, wand'ring long, a wider circle made,
And manylang'd nations has survey'd.
MANYPEOPLED. adj. [many and people.] Numerously populous.
He from the manypeop'd city flies;
Contemns their labours, and the drivers cries.
MANYTIMES, an adverbial phrase. Often; frequently.
They are Roman catholic in the device and legend, which are both of them manytimes taken out of the scriptures.
MAP. n. f. [mappe, low Latin.] A geographical picture on which lands and seas are delineated according to the longitude and latitude.
Zelazane earnestly entreated Dorus, that he would bestow a map of his little world upon her, that she might see whether it were troubled with such uninhabitable climes of cold despairs, and hot rages, as her's was.
I will take the map of Ireland, and lay it before me, and make mine eyes my schoolmasters, to give my understanding to judge of your plot.
Old coins are like to many maps for explaining the ancient geography.
O'er the map my finger taught to stray,
Cross many a region marks the winding way;
From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a mere geographer by love.
To MAP. v. a. [from the noun.] To delineate; to set down.
I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pifanio have mapp'd it right.
MAPLE tree. n. f.
The maple tree hath jagged or angular leaves; the seeds grow two together in hard-winged vessels: there are several species, of which the greater maple is falsely called the sycamore tree: the common maple is a tree frequent in hedge-rows.
The carver holme, the maple seldom inward found.
Of the rottenest maple wood burnt to ashes they make a strong lye.
MAPPERY. n. f. [from map.] The art of planning and designing.
The still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike
When himself calls them on;
They call this bedwork, mapp'ry, closet war.
To MAR. v. a. [amynan, Saxon.] To injure; to spoil; to hurt; to mischief; to damage. Obsolete.
Loss is no shame, nor to be less than foe,
But to be less than himself, doth mar
Both looser's lot, and victor's praise also.
The master may here only stumble, and perchance fall in teaching, to the marring and maiming of the scholar in learning.
When priests are more in words than matter,
When brewers marr their malt with water.
I pray you mar no more trees with writing songs in their barks.
— I pray you mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favour'dly.
Beware thine honour, be not then disgrac'd,
Take care thou mar not when thou think'st to mend.
Aumar became the man that all did mar,
Whether through indifference, chance, or worse.
The ambition to prevail in great things is less harmful than that other, to appear in every thing; for that breeds confusion, and marris business, when great in dependencies.
O! could we see how cause from cause doth spring!
How mutually they link'd and folded are:
And hear how oft one disagreeing string
The harmony doth rather make than marr!
Marr'd all his borrow'd vilages, and betray'd Him counterfeit.
Had he been there, untimely joy through all Mens hearts diffus'd, had marr'd the funeral.
'Tis much unsafe my fire to disobey:
Not only you provoke him to your cost,
But mirth is marr'd, and the good cheer is lost.
MARANATHA. n. f. [Syriack.] It signifies, the Lord comes, or, the Lord is come: it was a form of the denouncing or anathematizing among the Jews. St. Paul pronounces, If any love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha, which is as much as to say, May'st thou be devoted to the greatest of evils; and to the utmost severity of God's judgments; may the Lord come quickly to take vengeance of thy crimes.

MAR

MARA'SMUS. n. f. [μαρασμός, from μαρῆναι.] A consumption, in which persons waste much of their substance.
Pining atrophy.
Mara'smus, and wide-wasting pestilence.
A marasmus imports a consumption following a fever; a consumption or withering of the body, by reason of a natural extinction of the native heat, and an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat.
MARBLE. n. f. [marbre, French; marmor, Latin.]
1. Stone used in statues and elegant buildings, capable of a bright polish, and in a strong heat calcining into lime.
He plies her hard, and much rain wears the marble.
Whole as the marble, founded as the rock.
Thou marble hew'd, ere long to part with breath;
And houses rear'd, un mindful of thy death.
Some dry their corn infected with the brine,
Then grind with marbles, and prepare to dine.
The two flat sides of two pieces of marble will more easily approach each other, between which there is nothing but water or air, than if there be a diamond between them; not that the parts of the diamond are more solid, but because the parts of water being more easily separable, give way to the approach of the two pieces of marble.
2. Little balls of marble with which children play.
Marbles taught him percussion, and the laws of motion; nut-crackers the use of the lever.
3. A stone remarkable for the sculpture or inscription; as, the Oxford marbles.
MARBLE. adj.
1. Made of marble.
Pygmalion's fate revert is mine;
His marble love took flesh and blood,
All that I worshipp'd as divine,
That beauty, now 'tis understood,
Appears to have no more of life,
Than that whereof he fram'd his wife.
2. Variegated, or red like marble.
Shall I see far-fetched inventions? shall I labour to lay marble colours over my ruinous thoughts? or rather, though the pureness of my virgin-mind be stained, let me keep the true simplicity of my word.
The appendix shall be printed by itself, stitched, and with a marble cover.
To MARBLE. v. a. [marbrer, French, from the noun.] To variegate, or vein like marble.
A sheet of very well streaked marbled paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall with an equal diffusion.
Marbled with sage the hard'ning cheese she press'd,
And yellow butter Marian's skill profess'd.
MARBLEHEARTED. adj. [marble and heart.] Cruel; unfeeling; hard-hearted.
Ingratitude! thou marblehearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster.
MARCASITE. n. f.
The term marcasite has been very improperly used by some for blimuth, and by others for zink: the more accurate writers however always express a substance different from either of these by it, sulphureous and metallic. The marcasite is a solid hard fossil, of an obscurely and irregularly foliaceous structure, of a bright glittering appearance, and naturally found in continued beds among the veins of ores, or in the fissures of stone: the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almost endless: as it is generally found among the ores of metals, it is frequently impregnated with particles of them, and of other fossil bodies, and thence assumes various colours and degrees of hardness. There are however only three distinct species of it; one of a bright gold colour, another one a bright silver, and a third of a dead white: the silvery one seems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcasite is very frequent in the mines of Corn' wall, where the workmen call it mundick, but more so in Germany, where they extract vitriol and sulphur from it, besides which it contains a quantity of arsenick.
The writers of minerals give the name pyrites and marcasites indifferently to the same sort of body: I refrain the name of pyrites wholly to the nodules, or those that are found lodged in strata that are separate: the marcasite is part of the matter that either constitutes the stratum, or is lodged in the perpendicular fissures.
The acid salt dissolved in water is the same with oil of sulphur per campanam, and abounding much in the bowels of the earth, and particularly in marcasites, unites itself to the other ingredients of the marcasite, which are bitumen, iron, copper, copper, and earth, and with them compounds alum, vitriol, and sulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum; with the metal alone, or metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds sulphur: whence it comes to pass, that marcasites abound with those three minerals.

Here marcasites in various figures wait,
To ripen to a true metallic state.
MARCH. n. f. [from Mars.] The third month of the year.
March is drawn in tawny, with a fierce aspect, a helmet upon his head, to shew this month was dedicated to Mars.
To MARCH. v. n. [marcher, French, for varicare, Menages, from Mars, Junius.]
1. To move in military form.
Well march we on;
To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd.
He march'd in battle array with his power against Ar-pharad.
Maccabeus march'd forth, and slew five-and-twenty thousand persons.
My father, when some days before his death
He order'd me to march for Utica, Wept o'er me.
2. To walk in a grave, deliberate, or stately manner.
Plexurus finding that if nothing else, famine would at last bring him to destruction, thought better by humbleness to creep where by pride he could not march.
Doth York intend no harm to us,
That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm.
Our bodies, ev'ry footstep that they make,
March towards death, until at last they die.
Like thee, great son of Jove, like thee,
When clad in rising majesty,
Thou marchest down o'er Delos' hills.
The power of wisdom march'd before.
To MARCH. v. n.
1. To put in military movement.
Cyrus marching his army for divers days over mountains of snow, the dazzling splendor of its whiteness prejudiced the sight of very many of his soldiers.
2. To bring in regular procession.
March them again in fair array,
And bid them form the happy day;
The happy day design'd to wait
On William's fame, and Europe's fate.
MARCH. n. f. [marcher, French.]
1. Movement; journey of soldiers.
These troops came to the army harass'd with a long and wearisome march, and cast away their arms and garments, and fought in their shirts.
Who should command, by his Almighty nod,
These choler troops, unconscious of the road,
And unacquainted with th' appointed end,
Their marches to begin, and thither tend.
Their march begins in military state.
2. Grave and solemn walk.
Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine.
3. Deliberate or laborious walk.
We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it.
4. Signals to move.
The drums presently striking up a march, they make no longer stay, but forward they go directly towards Neoflat.
5. Marches, without singular. [march, Gothic; meare, Saxon; marche, French.] Borders; limits; confines.
They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pillaging borderers.
The English colonies were enforced to keep continual guards upon the borders and marches round them.
It is not fit that a king of an island should have any marches or borders but the four seas.
MARCHEUR. n. f. [from marcheur, French.] President of the marches or borders.
Many of our English lords made war upon the Welshmen at their own charge; the lands which they gained they held to their own use; they were called lords marchers, and had royal liberties.
MARCHESS. n. f. [feminine, formed by adding the English female termination to the Latin marchia.] The wife of a marquis.
The king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you, no less flowing Than marchioness of Pembroke.
From a private gentlewoman he made me a marchioness, and from a marchioness a queen, and now he intends to crown

MAR

my innocency with the glory of martyrdom.
The lady marchioness, his wife, solicited very diligently the timely preservation of her husband.
MARCIAPANE. n. f. [massapane, French.] A kind of sweet bread, or biscuit.
Along whole ridge such bones are met,
Like comfits round in marchpane set.
MARCID. adj. [marcidus, Latin.] Lean; pining; withered.
A burning colliquative fever, the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adhesion upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever.
He on his own fill pours the noblest oil;
That to your marcid dying herbs assign'd,
By the rank smell and taste betrays its kind.
MARCOUR. n. f. [marcor, Latin.] Leanness; the state of withering; waste of flesh.
Considering the exolution and languor ensuing the action of ventry in some, the extenuation and marcor in others, it much abridgeth our days.
A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a lesser withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all means of cure.
MARE. n. f. [mares, Saxon.]
1. The female of a horse.
A pair of courters born of heav'nly breed,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial fire,
By substituting mares, produc'd on earth,
Whose wombs conceiv'd a more than mortal birth.
2. [From mara, the name of a spirit imagined by the nations of the north to torment sleepers.] A kind of torpor or stagnation, which seems to press the stomach with a weight; the night hag.
Mab, his merry queen by night,
Betrides young folks that lie upright,
In elder times the mare that hight,
Which plagues them out of measure.
Mushrooms cause the incubus, or the mare in the stomach.
MARESCHAL. n. f. [mareschal, French, derived by Junius from mare, the female of an horse.] A chief commander of an army.
O William, may thy arms advance,
That he may lose Dinant next year,
And so be mareschal of France.
MARGARITE. n. f. [margarita, Latin; marguerite, French.] A pearl.
Silver is the second metal, and signifies purity; among the planets it holdeth with luna, among precious stones with the margarite or pearl.
MARGARITES. n. f. An herb.
MARGE. n. f. [marga, Latin; marge, French.]
1. The border; the brink; the edge; the verge.
He drew his flaming sword, and struck
At him so fiercely, that the upper marge
Of his sevenfold shield away it took.
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
Or on the beached margin of the sea.
An airy crowd came rushing where he stood,
Which fill'd the margin of the fatal flood.
2. The edge of a page left blank, or fill'd with a short note.
As much love in rhyme,
As would be cram'd up in a sheet of paper
Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all.
Reconcile those two places, which both you and the margins of our bibles acknowledge to be parallel.
He knows in law, nor text, nor margin.
3. The edge of a wound or sore.
All the advantage to be gathered from it is only from the evenness of its margin, the purpose will be as fully answered by keeping that under only.
MARGINAL. n. f. [marginal, French, from margin.] Placed, or written on the margin.
We cannot better interpret the meaning of these words than pope Leo himself expoundeth them, whose speech concerning our Lord's ascension may serve instead of a marginal gloss.
What remarks you find worthy of your riper observation note with a marginal star, as being worthy of your second year's review.
MARGINATED. adj. [marginatus, Lat. from margin.] Having a margin.
MARGRAVE. n. f. [march and graf, German.] A title of sovereignty in Germany; in its original import, keeper of the marches or borders.
MARIETS. n. f. A kind of violet.
MARGOLD. n. f. [Mary and gold.] A yellow flower, devoted, I suppose, to the virgin.

MAR

The marigold hath a radiated discous flower; the petals of them are, for the most part, crenated, the seeds crooked and rough; those which are uppermost long, and those within short: the leaves are long, intire, and, for the most part, succulent. Miller.
Your circle will teach you to draw truly all spherical bodies. The most of flowers; as, the rose and marigold. Peach.
The marigold, whose courtier's face Echoes the sun, and doth unlace Her at his rise. Cleaveland.
Fair is the gillflower, of gardens sweet,
Fair is the marigold, for pottage meet. Gay's Pastorals.
To MA'RI'NATE. v. a. [mariner, French.] To salt fish, and then preserve them in oil or vinegar.
Why am I sty'd a cook, if I'm loath
To marinate my fish, or season broth. King's Cookery.
MAR'INE. adj. [marinus, Latin.] Belonging to the sea.
The king was desirous that the ordinances of England and France, touching marine affairs, might be reduced into one form. Hayward.
Vast multitudes of shells, and other marine bodies, are found lodged in all sorts of stone. Woodward.
No longer Circe could her flame disguise,
But to the suppliant God marine replies. Garth's Ovid.
MAR'INE. n. f. [la marine, French.]
1. Sea-affairs.
Nearchus, who commanded Alexander's fleet, and Onesicritus his intendant-general of marine, have both left relations of the state of the Indies at that time. Arbutnot.
2. A soldier taken on shipboard to be employed in descents upon the land.
MA'RI'NER. n. f. [from mare, Latin; marinier, French.] A seaman; a sailor.
The merry mariner unto his word
Soon hearkened, and her painted boat straightway Turn'd to the shore. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Your ships are not well mann'd,
Your mariners are multiteers, or reapers. Shakespeare.
We oft deceive ourselves, as did that mariner who, mistaking them for precious stones, brought home his ship fraught with common pebbles from the remotest Indies. Glanville's Scip.
His busy mariners he hastes,
His shatter'd sails with rigging to restore. Dryden.
What mariner is not afraid,
To venture in a ship decay'd. Swift's Miscel.
MA'RIORAM. n. f. [mariorana, Lat. marjolaine, Fr.] A fragrant plant of many kinds; the bastard kind only grows here.
The nymphs of the mountains would be drawn upon their heads garlands of honeysuckles, woodbine, and sweet marjoram. Peacham on Drawing.
MAR'ISH. n. f. [marais, French; meire, Saxon; maersche, Dutch.] A bog; a fen; a swamp; watry ground; a marsh; a morass; a more.
The flight was made towards Dalkeith; which way, by reason of the marsh, the English horse were least able to pursue. Hayward.
When they had avenged the blood of their brother, they turned again to the marsh of Jordan. 1 Mac. ix. 42.
Lodovinus, carried away with the breaking in of the horsemen, was driven into a marsh; where, after being fore wounded, and fast in the mud, he had done the uttermost. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
His limbs he coucheth in the cooler shades;
Oft, when heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marshes resorts. Sandys's Paraphrase.
From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended; on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as ev'ning mist
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides.
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heel. Milton.
MAR'ISH. adj. Morish; fenny; boggy; swampy.
It hath been a great endangering to the health of some plantations, that they have built along the sea and rivers, in marshy and unwholesome grounds. Bacon's Essays.
The fen and quagmire to marshy by kind,
Are to be drained. Tusser's Husbandry.
MAR'ITAL. n. f. [maritus, Latin; marital, French.] Pertaining to a husband; incident to a husband.
If any one retains a wife that has been taken in the act of adultery, he hereby incurs the guilt of the crime of bawdry. But because repentance does, for the most part, consist in the mind, and since Christian charity, as well as marital affection, easily induces a belief thereof, this law is not observed. Ayliffe's Parergon.
It has been determined by some unpolite professors of the law, that a husband may exercise his marital authority so far, as to give his wife moderate correction. Art of Tormenting.
MAR'ITATED. adj. [from maritus, Latin.] Having a husband. Diſt.

2. Relating to the sea; naval.
At the parliament at Oxford, his youth, and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched. Wotton's Buckingham.
3. Bordering on the sea.
The friend, the shores maritimal
Sought for his bed, and found a place upon which play'd
The murmuring billows. Chapman's Iliads.
Ereco, and the less maritime kings Monbaza and Quiloa. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
Neptune upbraided them with their stupidity and ignorance, that a maritime town should neglect the patronage of him who was the god of the seas. Addison's Freeholder.
MARK. n. f. [marc, Welsh; meapc, Saxon; merche, Dutch; marque, French.]
1. A token by which any thing is known.
Once was proclaimed throughout all Ireland, that all men should mark their cattle with an open several mark upon their flanks or buttocks, so as if they happened to be stolen they might appear whose they were. Spenser on Ireland.
In the present form of the earth there are certain marks and indications of its first state; with which, if we compare those things that are recorded in sacred history, we may discover what the earth was in its first original. Burnet.
The urine is a lixivium of the salts in a human body, and the proper mark of the state and quantity of such salts; and therefore very certain indications for the choice of diet may be taken from the state of urine. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. A token; an impression.
But cruel fate, and my more cruel wife,
To Grecian swords betray'd my sleeping life:
These are the monuments of Helen's love,
The flame I bear below, the marks I bore above. Dryden.
'Twas then old soldiers cover'd o'er with scars,
The marks of Pyrrhus, or the Punick wars,
Thought all past services rewarded well,
If to their share at least two acres fell. Dryden's Juvenal.
At present there are scarce any marks left of a subterraneous fire; for the earth is cold, and over-run with grass and shrubs. Addison on Italy.
3. A proof; an evidence.
As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language is a mark of union. Bacon.
The Argonauts sail'd up the Danube, and from thence pass'd into the Adriatick, carrying their ship Argo upon their shoulders; a mark of great ignorance in geography among the writers of that time. Arbutnot on Coins.
4. Notice taken.
Upon the north sea bordereth Stow, so called, per eminentiam, as a place of great and good mark and scope. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

France was a fairer mark to shoot at than Ireland, and could better reward the conqueror. Davies on Ireland.
6. Any thing at which a missile weapon is directed.
Be made the mark
For all the people's hate, the prince's curses. Denham.
7. The evidence of a horse's age.
At four years old cometh the mark of tooth in horses, which hath a hole as big as you may lay a pea within it; and weareth shorter and shorter every year, till at eight years old the tooth is smooth. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 754.
8. [Marque, French.] Licence of reprisals.
9. [Marc, French.] A sum of thirteen shillings and fourpence.
We give thee for reward a thousand marks. Shakespeare.
Thirty of these pence make a mancus, which some think to be all one with a mark, for that manca and mancus is translated, in ancient books, by marca. Camden's Remains.
Upon every writ for debt or damage, amounting to forty pounds or more, a noble is paid to fine; and so for every hundred marks more a noble. Bacon.
10. A character made by those who cannot write their names.
Here are marriage vows for signing;
Set your marks that cannot write. Dryden's King Arthur.
TO MARK. v. a. [merken, Dutch; meapcan, Saxon; marquer, French.]
1. To impress with a token, or evidence.
Will it not be received,
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two
Of his own chamber, and us'd their very daggers,
That they have don't. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
For our quiet possession of things useful, they are naturally marked where there is need. Grew's Cymol.
2. To distinguish as by a mark.

That

MAR

That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides. Decay of Piety.
3. To note; to take notice of.
Alas, poor country!
Where sighs, and groans, and shrieks, that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd! Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Mark them which cause divisions contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them. Rom. xvi. 17.
Now swear, and call to witness Heav'n, hell, and earth, I mark it not from one That breaths beneath such complicated guilt. Smith.
TO MARK. v. n. To note; to take notice.
Men mark when they hit, and never mark when they miss, as they do also of dreams. Bacon's Essays.
Mark a little why Virgil is so much concerned to make this marriage; it is to make way for the divorce which he intended afterwards. Dryden's Em.
MAR'KER. n. f. [marqueur, French, from mark.]
1. One that puts a mark on any thing.
2. One that notes, or takes notice.
MAR'KET. n. f. [anciently written mercāt, of mercatus, Lat.]
1. A publick time of buying and selling.
It were good that the privilege of a market were given, the rather to enable them to their defence; for there is nothing doth sooner cause civility than many market towns, by reason the people repairing often thither will learn civil manners. Spenser on Ireland.
Mistress, know yourself, down on your knees,
And thank heav'n, fasting, for a good man's love:
For I must tell you friendly in your ear,
Sell when you can, you are not for all markets. Shakespeare.
They counted our life a pastime, and our time here a market for gain. Wisd. xv. 12.
If one bushel of wheat and two bushels of barley will, in the market, be taken one for another, they are of equal worth. Locke.
2. Purchase and sale.
With another year's continuance of the war, there will hardly be money left in this kingdom to turn the common markets, or pay rents. Temple.
The precious weight
Of pepper and Sabeian incense take,
And with post-haste thy running market make,
Be sure to turn the penny. Dryden's Persius.
3. Rate; price. [marc, French.]
'Twas then old soldiers, cover'd o'er with scars,
Thought all past services rewarded well,
If, to their share, at least two acres fell,
Their country's frugal bounty; so of old
Was blood and life at a low market sold. Dryden's Juv.
TO MARK'ET. v. n. To deal at a market; to buy or sell; to make bargains.

To face the garment of rebellion
With some fine colour. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
MAR'KET-DAY. n. f. [market and day.] The day on which things are publicly bought and sold.
Fool that I was, I thought imperial Rome,
Like Mantua, where on marketdays we come,
And thither drive our lambs. Dryden's Virgil.
He ordered all the Lucques to be seized that were found on a marketday in one of his frontier towns. Addison on Italy.
MAR'KET-FOLKS. n. f. [market and folks.] People that come to the market.
Poor marketfolks, that come to sell their corn. Shakespeare.
MAR'KET-MAN. n. f. [market and man.] One who goes to the market to sell or buy.
Be wary how you place your words,
Talk like the vulgar sort of marketmen,
That come to gather money for their corn. Shakespeare.
The marketman should act as if his master's whole estate ought to be applied to that servant's business. Swift.
MAR'KET-MAID. n. f. [market and maid.] A woman that goes to buy or sell.
You are come
A marketmaid to Rome, and have prevented
The ostentation of our love. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
MAR'KET-PLACE. n. f. [market and place.] Place where the market is held.
The king, thinking he had put up his sword, because of the noise, never took leisure to hear his answer, but made him prisoner, meaning the next morning to put him to death in the marketplace. Sidney, b. ii.

MAR

The gates he order'd all to be unbar'd,
And from the marketplace to draw the guard. Dryden.
Behold the marketplace with poor o'erspread;
The man of Rofs divides the weekly bread. Pope.
MARKET-PRICE. n. f. [market and price or rate.] The price MARKET-RATE. n. f. [market and rate.] at which any thing is currently sold.

MARKMAN. n. f. [mark and man.] A man skilful to hit a mark.
MARKSMAN. n. f. [mark and man.] A man skilful to hit a mark.
In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman:
—I aim'd so near when I suppos'd you lov'd.
—A right good marksmen. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.
Whom nothing can procure;
When the wide world runs bias from his will,
To writhe his limbs, and share, not mend the ill.
This is the marksmen, safe and sure,
Who still is right, and prays to be so still. Herbert.
An ordinary marksmen may know certainly when he shoots less wide at what he aims. Dryden's Ded. to the Sp. Fyrar.
MARL. n. f. [marl, Welsh; mergel, Dutch; marga, Latin; marle, marne, Fr. in Saxon, merz, is marrow, with an allusive signification, marl being the fatness of the earth.]
Marl is a kind of clay, which is become fatter, and of a more enriching quality, by a better fermentation, and by its having lain so deep in the earth as not to have spent or weakened its fertilizing quality by any product. Marl is supposed to be much of the nature of chalk, and is believed to be fertile from its salt and oily quality. Quincy.
We understand by the term marls simple native earths, less heavy than the boles or clays, not soft and unctuous to the touch, nor ductile while moist, dry and crumbly between the fingers, and readily diffusible in water. Hill.
Marl is the best compost, as having most fatness, and not heating the ground too much. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 596.
Uneasy steps
Over the burning marl, not like those steps
On heaven's azure. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
TO MARL. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure with marl.
Those improvements by marling, liming, and draining, have been made since money was at five and six per cent. Child's Discourse of Trade.

The marriage with his brother's wife

Has crept too near his conscience. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,

Thy purpose marriage, fend me word to-morrow. Shakespeare.

The French king would have the disposing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception, that he should not marry her himself. Bacon.

Some married persons, even in their marriage, do better please God than some virgins in their state of virginity: they, by giving great example of conjugal affection, by preserving their faith unbroken, and by educating children in the fear of God, please God in a higher degree than those virgins whose piety is not answerable to their opportunities. Taylor.

I propose that Palamon shall be

In marriage join'd with beauteous Emily. Dryden.

Neither her worthiness, which in truth was great, nor his own suffering for her, which is wont to endear affection, could fether his fickleness; but, before the marriage-day appointed, he had taken to wife Baccha, of whom the complained. Sidney, b. ii.

I by the honour of my marriage-bed,

After young Arthur, claim this land for mine. Shakespeare.

Thou shalt come into the marriage chamber. Tob. vi. 16.

There on his arms and once lov'd portrait lay,

Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.

To these whom death again did wed,

This grave's the second marriage-bed:

For though the hand of fate could force

'Twixt soul and body a divorce,

It could not sever man and wife,

Because they both liv'd but one life. Crashaw.

Give me, to live and die,

A spotless maid, without the marriage-tie. Dryden.

In a late draught of marriage-articles, a lady stipulated with her husband, that she shall be at liberty to patch on which side she pleases. Addison's Spect. No. 81.

Virgin awake! the marriage-hour is nigh. Pope.

Thus have you thund' the marry'd state. Dryden.

MARROW. n. f. [meurg, Saxon; meurg, Erse; meurg, Scottish.]

All the bones of the body which have any considerable thickness have either a large cavity, or they are spongy, and full of little cells: in both the one and the other there is an oleaginous substance, called marrow, contained in proper vessels or membranes, like the fat: in the larger bones this fine oil, by the gentle heat of the body, is exhaled through the pores of its small bladders, and enters some narrow passages, which lead to some fine canals excavated in the substance of the bone, that the marrow may supply the fibres of the bones, and render them less apt to break. Quincy.

Would he were wadded, marrow, bones, and all,

That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring. Shak.

The skull hath brains as a kind of marrow within it: the back-bone hath one kind of marrow, and other bones of the body hath another: the jaw-bones have no marrow severed, but a little pulp of marrow diffused. Bacon.

Pamper'd and edify'd their zeal

With marrow puddings many a meal. Hudibras, p. ii.

He bit the dart, and wrench'd the wood away,

The point still buried in the marrow lay. Addison's Ovid.

MARROW. in the Scottish dialect, to this day, denotes a fellow, companion, or associate; as also equal match, he met with his marrow.

Though buying and selling doth wonderful wel,

Yet chopping and changing I cannot commend

With thee of his marrow for fear of it end. Tusser.

The duke of Suffolk claims

To be high steward; next the duke of Norfolk

To be earl marshal. Shakespeare.

2. An officer who regulates combats in the lists.

Dares their pride presume against my laws,

As in a lifted field to fight their cause?

Unask'd the royal grant; no marshal by,

As kingly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

3. Any one who regulates rank or order at a feast, or any other assembly.

Through the hall there walked to and fro

A jolly yeoman, marshal of the fame,

Whole name was Appetite; he did bestow

Both guests and meats, whenever in they came,

And knew them how to order without blame. Fa. Queen.

4. An harbinger; a purveyor; one who goes before a prince to declare his coming, and provide entertainment.

Her face, when it was fairest, had been but as a marshal to lodge the love of her in his mind, which now was so well placed as it needed no further help of outward harbinger. Sidney.

To MARSHAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To arrange; to rank in order.

Multitude of jealousies, and lack of some predominant desire, that should marshal and put in order all the rest, maketh any man's heart hard to find or found. Bacon.

It is as unconceivable how it should be the directrix of such intricate motions, as that a blind man should marshal an army. Glanville's Sleep.

Anchises lock'd not with so pleas'd a face,

In numbring o'er his future Roman race,

And marshalling the heroes of his name,

As, in their order, next to light they came. Dryden.

2. To lead as an harbinger.

Art thou but

A dagger of the mind, a false creation,

Thou marshallest me the way that I was going. Shakespeare.

MARSHALLER. n. f. [from marshal.] One that arranges; one that ranks in order.

Dryden was the great refiner of English poetry, and the best marshaller of words. Trapp's Pref. to the Ensis.

Truth's early champion, martyr for his God. Thomson.
To MARTYR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To put to death for virtue.
2. To murder; to destroy.
You could not beg for grace.
Hark wretches, how I mean to martyr you:
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats. Shakespeare.
If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.
MARTYRDOM. n. f. [from martyr.] The death of a martyr;
the honour of a martyr.
If an infidel should pursue to death an heretick professing Christianity only for Christian profession sake, could we deny unto him the honour of martyrdom? Hooker, b. v.
Now that he hath left no higher degree of earthly honour, he intends to crown their innocency with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.
Herod, whose unblest
Hand, O! what dares not jealous greatness? tore
A thousand sweet babes from their mother's breast,
The blooms of martyrdom. Crashaw.
What mists of providence are these,
So faints, by supernatural pow'r set free,
Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden.
MARTYROLOGY. n. f. [martyrologie, Fr. martyrologium, Lat.]
A register of martyrs.
In the Roman martyrology we find at one time many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian, being met together in a church, rather than escape by offering a little incense at their coming out. Stillingfleet.
MARTYROLOGIST. n. f. [martyrologiste, French.] A writer of martyrology.
MARVEL. n. f. [merveille, French.] A wonder; any thing astonishing. Little in use.
A marvel it were, if a man could spy, in the whole scripture, nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.
I am scarce in breath, my lord.
—No marvel, you have to bestir'd your valour; you cowardly scall! Shakespeare's King Lear.
No marvel
My lord protector's hawks do towre so well. Shakespeare.
MARVEL of Peru. A flower. Ains.
To MARVEL. v. n. [merveille, French.] To wonder; to be astonished. Disused.
You make me marvel. Shakespeare.
Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied. Shakespeare.
—The army marvelled at it. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The countries marvelled at thee for thy songs, proverbs, and parables. Ecclus. xlvii. 17.
MARVELLOUS. adj. [merveilleux, French.]
1. Wonderful; strange; astonishing.
She has a marvellous white hand, I must confess. Shakespeare.
This is the Lord's doing; it is marvellous in our eyes. Psal. cxviii. 23.
2. Surpassing credit.
The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope's Pref. to the Iliad.
3. The marvellous is used, in works of criticism, to express any thing exceeding natural power, opposed to the probable.
MARVELLOUSLY. adv. [from marvellous.] Wonderfully;
strangely.
You look not well, feignior Antonio;
You have too much respect upon the world;
They lose it that do buy it with much care. Shakespeare.
Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd. Shakespeare.
The encouragement of his two late successes, with which he was marvellously elated. Clarendon, b. viii.
MARVELLOUSNESS. n. f. [from marvellous.] Wonderfulness;
strangeness; astonishingness.
MA'SCULINE. adj. [masculin, Fr. masculinus, Latin.]
1. Male; not female.
Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long! Shakespeare.
His long beard noth the air and fire, the two masculine elements exercising their operation upon nature being the feminine. Peacham on Drawing.
O! why did God,
Creator wife! that peopl'd highest heav'n
With spirits masculine, create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
2. Resembling man; virile; not soft; not effeminate.
You find something bold and masculine in the air and posture of the first figure, which is that of virtue. Addison.
3. [In grammar.] It denotes the gender appropriated to the male kind in any word, though not always expressing sex.
MA'SCULINELY. adv. [from masculine.] Like a man.
Aurelia tells me, you have done most masculinely,
And play the orator. Benj. Johnson's Catoine.

M A S

MA'SCULINENESS. n. f. [from masculine.] Mannishness; male
MASH. n. f. [masche, Dutch.]
1. The space between the threads of a net, commonly written mesh.
To defend one's self against the stings of bees, have a net knit with so small meshes, that a bee cannot get through.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. Any thing mingled or beaten together into an undistinguisht or confused body. [from mischen, Dutch, to mix, or mas-cher, French.]
3. A mixture for a horse.
Put half a peck of ground malt into a pale, then put to it as much scalding water as will wet it well; stir it about for half an hour till the water is very sweet, and give it the horse lukewarm: this mash is to be given to a horse after he has taken a purge, to make it work the better; or in the time of great sickness, or after hard labour. Farrier's Dict.
When mares foal, they feed them with mash, and other moist food. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To MASH. v. a. [mascher, French.]
1. To beat into a confused mass.
The pressure would be intolerable, and they would even mash themselves and all things else apieces. More.
To break the claw of a lobster, clap it between the sides of the dining-room door: thus you can do it without mashing the meat. Stuff's Directions to the Footman.
2. To mix malt and water together in brewing.
What was put in the first mashing-tub draw off, as also that liquor in the second mashing-tub. Mortimer's Husbandry.
MASK. n. f. [masque, French.]
1. A cover to disguise the face; a visor.
Now love pulled off his mask, and shewed his face unto her, and told her plainly that he was his prisoner. Sidney.
Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And throw her sun-expelling mask away;
The air hath star'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shakespeare.
Could we suppose that a mask represented never to naturally the general humour of a character, it can never suit with the variety of passions that are incident to every single person in the whole course of a play. Addison on Italy.
2. Any pretence or subterfuge.
Too plain thy nakedness of soul spy'd,
Why dost thou strive the conscious shame to hide,
By masks of eloquence, and veils of pride? Prior.
3. A festive entertainment, in which the company is masked.
Will you prepare for this masque to-night. Shakespeare.
4. A revel; a piece of mummery; a wild buffle.
They in the end agreed,
That at a masque and common revelling,
Which was ordain'd, they should perform the deed. Daniel.
This thought might lead me through this world's vain masks.
Content, though blind, had I no other guide. Milton.
5. A dramatick performance, written in a tragick stile without attention to rules or probability.
Thus I have broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets in their pictures, poems, comedies, and masks. Peacham.
To MASK. v. a. [masquer, French.]
1. To disguise with a mask or visor.
What will grow out of such errors as go masked under the cloke of divine authority, impossible it is that ever the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them. Hooker.
'Tis not my blood
Wherein thou see'st me masked. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was he;
But being mask'd he was not sure. Shakespeare.
The old Vatican Terence has, at the head of every scene, the figures of all the persons, with their particular disguises; and I saw in the Villa di Mattheo an antique statue masked, which was perhaps designed for Gnatho in the eunuch, for it agrees exactly with the figure he makes in the manuscript. Addison.
2. To cover; to hide.
To your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
As when a piece of wanton lawn,
A thin aerial veil is drawn
O'er beauty's face, seeming to hide,
More sweetly shows the blushing bride:
A foul whose intellectual beams
No mists do mask, no lazy fumes. Crashaw.
To MASK. v. n.
1. To revel; to play the mummer.
Thy gown? Why, ay; come, taylor, let us see't;
What masking stuff's here! Shakespeare.
Masking habits, and a borrow'd name,
Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame. Prior.
2. To be disguised any way. MA'SKER.

M A S

MA'SKER. n. f. [from mask.] One who revels in a mask; a mummer.
Tell false Edward,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers, Shakespeare.
To revel it with him and his new bride. Shakespeare.
Let the scenes abound with light, and let the maskers that are to come down from the scene have some motions upon the scene before their coming down. Bacon.
The maskers come late, and I think will stay,
Like fairies, till the cock crow them away. Donne.
MA'SON. n. f. [mason, French; mactio, low Latin.] A builder with stone.
Many find a reason very wittily before the thing be true; that the materials being left rough, are more manageable in the mason's hand than if they had been smooth. Watson.
A mason that makes a wall meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and places it in his work. More.
MA'SONRY. n. f. [maçonnerie, Fr.] The craft or performance of a mason.
MASQUERA'DE. n. f. [from masque.]
1. A diversion in which the company is masked.
What guards the purity of melting maids,
In costly balls, and midnight masquerades,
Safe from the treach'rous friend, and daring spark,
The glance by day, the whisper in the dark. Pope.
2. Disguise.
I was upon the frolic this evening, and came to visit thee in masquerade. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Truth, of all things the plainest and sincerest, is forced to gain admittance to us in disguise, and court us in masquerade.
Peltou on the Classics.
To MASQUERA'DE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To go in disguise.
A freak took an ass in the head, and away he goes into the woods, masquerading up and down in a lion's skin.
L'Estrange's Fables.
2. To assemble in masks.
I find that our art hath not gained much by the happy revival of masquerading among us. Swift.
MASQUERA'DER. n. f. [from masquerade.] A person in a mask.
The most dangerous sort of cheats are but masqueraders under the vizor of friends. L'Estrange.
MASS. n. f. [masse, Fr. massa, Latin.]
1. A body; a lump; a continuous quantity.
If it were not for these principles the bodies, of the earth, planets, comets, sun, and all things in them, would grow cold and freeze, and become inactive masses. Newton's Opt.
Some passing into their pores, others adhering in lumps or masses to their outides, so as wholly to cover and involve it in the mass they together constituted. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
2. A large quantity.
Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
He had spent a huge mass of treasure in transporting his army. Davies on Ireland.
3. Bulk; vast body.
The Creator of the world would not have framed so huge a mass of earth but for some reasonable creatures to have their habitation. Abbot's Description of the World.
This army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince, Shakespeare's Hamlet.
He discovered to me the richest mines which the Spaniards have, and from whence all the mass of gold that comes into Spain is drawn. Raleigh's Essays.
4. Congeries; assemblage indistinct.
The whole knowledge of groups, of the lights and shadows, and of those masses which Titian calls a bunch of grapes, is, in the prints of Rubens, exposed clearly to the light. Dryden.
At distance, through an artful glass,
To the mind's eye things well appear;
They lose their forms, and make a mass
Confus'd and black, if brought too near. Prior.
Where flowers grow, the ground at a distance seems covered with them, and we must walk into it before we can distinguish the several weeds that spring up in such a beautiful mass of colours. Addison's Freeholder.
5. Gross body; the general.
Comets have power over the gross and mass of things; but they are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects. Bacon's Essays.
Where'er thou art, he is; th' eternal mind
Acts through all places; is to none confin'd:
Fills ocean, earth, and air, and all above,
And through the universal mass does move. Dryden.
The mass of the people have opened their eyes, and will not be governed by Clodius and Curio at the head of their myrmidons. Swift.
If there is not a sufficient quantity of blood and strength of circulation, it may infect the whole mass of the fluids.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
6. [Missa, Latin.] The service of the Romish church.

M A S

Burnished gold is that manner of gilding which we see in old parchment and mass books, done by monks and priests;
who were very expert herein. Peacham on Drawing.
He infers, that then Luther must have been unpardonably wicked in using masses for fifteen years. Atterbury.
To MASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To celebrate mass.
All their massing furniture almost they took from the law, least having an altar and a priest they should want vestments.
Hooker, b. iv.
To MASS. v. a. [from the noun.] It seems once to have signified to thicken; to strengthen.
They feared the French might, with filling or massing the house, or else by fortifying, make such a piece as might annoy the haven. Hayward.
MASSACRE. n. f. [massacre, French, from mazzare, Italian.]
1. Carnage; slaughter; butchery; indiscriminate destruction.
Of whom such massacre
Make they, but of their brethren, men of men. Milton.
Slaughter grows murder, when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
2. Murder.
The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
To MASSACRE. v. a. [massacrer, French, from the noun.]
To butcher; to slaughter indiscriminately.
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction, and their family. Shakespeare.
Christian religion, now crumbled into fractions, may, like dust, be irrecoverably dissipated, if God do not counterminus, or we recover so much sobriety as to forbear to massacre what we pretend to love. Decay of Piety.
After the miserable slaughter of the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem, they were scattered into all corners, oppressed and detested, and sometimes massacred and extirpated. Atterb.
MASSICOT. n. f. [French.]
Massicot is cerus calcined by a moderate degree of fire; of this there are three sorts, the white, the yellow, and that of a golden colour, their difference arising from the different degrees of fire applied in the operation. White massicot is of a yellowish white, and is that which has received the least calcination; yellow massicot has received more, and gold-coloured massicot still more; all of them should be an impalpable powder, weighty and high-coloured: they are used in painting. Trevoux.
MA'SSINESS. n. f. [from massy, massive.] Weight; bulk;
MA'SSIVENESS. n. f. ponderousness.
It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision which he served in it, than for the massiness of the dish.
Hakewill on Providence.
MA'SSIVE. adj. [massif, French.] Heavy; weighty; ponderous; bulky; continuous.
If you would hurt,
Your swords are now too massy for your strength,
And will not be uplifted. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Perhaps these few stones and sling, used with invocation of the Lord of Hosts, may countervail the massive armour of the uncircumcised Philistine. Government of the Tongue.
No sideboards then with gilded plate were press'd,
No sweating slaves with massy dishes dress'd. Dryden.
The more gross and massive parts of the terrestrial globe, the strata of stone, owe their present order to the deluge.
Woodward's Nat. Hist.
If these liquors or glasses were so thick and massy that no light could get through them, I question not but that they would, like all other opaque bodies, appear of one and the same colour in all positions of the eye. Newton's Opticks.
Th' intrepid Theban hears the bursting sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonish'd from the hills afar,
The floods descending, and the wat'ry war. Pope's Statius.
Swift the signal giv'n,
They start away, and sweep the massy mound
That runs around the hill. Thomson's Spring.
MAST. n. f. [mast, mât, French; maste, Saxon.]
1. The beam or post raised above the vessel, to which the sail is fixed.
Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude
That thou hast perpendicularly fallen. Shakespeare's King Lear.
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,
His vessel moor'd. Dryden's Homer.
2. The fruit of the oak and beech.
The oaks bear masts, the briars scarlet hips;
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush Lays her full masts before you. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
Trees that bear mast, and nuts, are more lasting than those that bear fruits; as oaks and beeches last longer than apples and pears. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 583.
When sheep fed like men upon acorns, a shepherd drove his flock into a little oak wood, and up he went to shake them down some masts. L'Estrange's Fables.
The

M A S

The breaking down an old frame of government, and erecting a new, seems like the cutting down an old oak and planting a young one: it is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade and the mast, but the planter, besides the pleasure of imagination, has no other benefit.

As a savage boar,
With forest mast and fatning marshes fed;
When once he fees himself in toils inclos'd,
Whets his tusks.
Wond'ring dolphins o'er the palace glide;
On leaves and mast of mighty oaks they brouze;
And their broad fins entangle in the boughs.
MA'STER. adj. [from maſt.] Furnished with masts.
MASTER. n. f. [meſter, Dutch; maître, French; magiſter, Latin.]

1. One who has servants; opposed to man or servant.
But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are yours my lord.
Take up thy master.
My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it;
The boy, his clerk, begg'd mine;
And neither man nor master would take aught
But the two rings.

2. A director; a governor.
If thou be made the master of a feast, be among them as one of the rest.
My friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet, and the song.
3. Owner; proprietor.
An orator, who had undertaken to make a panegyric on Alexander the Great, and who had employed the strongest figures of his rhetoric in the praise of Bucephalus, would do quite the contrary to that which was expected from him; because it would be believed, that he rather took the horse for his subject than the master.

4. A lord; a ruler.
Wisdom and virtue are the proper qualifications in the master of a house.
There Cæsar, grac'd with both Minerva's, throne,
Cæsar, the world's great master, and his own.
The pride of royal blood, that checks my soul;
You know, alas! I was not born to kneel,
To sue for pity, and to own a master.

5. Chief; head.
Chief master-gunner am I of this town,
Something I must do to procure me grace.
As a wife master-builder I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon.
The best sets are the heads got from the very tops of the root; the next are the runners, which spread from the master roots.
6. Possessor.
When I have thus made myself master of a hundred thousand drachms, I shall naturally set myself on the foot of a prince, and will demand the grand vizier's daughter in marriage.
The duke of Savoy may make himself master of the French dominions on the other side of the Rhone.
7. Commander of a trading ship.
An unhappy master is he that is made cunning by many shipwrecks; a miserable merchant, that is neither rich nor wife, but after some bankrupts.
A sailor's wife had chefnuts in her lap;
Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o' th' Tyger.

8. One uncontrolled.
Let ev'ry man be master of his time
Till seven at night.
Great, and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master.
9. A compellation of respect.
Master doctor, you have brought those drugs.
Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king.
Masters play here, I will content your pains,
Something that's brief; and bid, good morrow, general.

10. A young gentleman.
If gaming does an aged fire entice,
Then my young master swiftly learns the vice.
Master lay with his bedchamber towards the south sun;
mils lodged in a garret, exposed to the north wind.
Where there are little masters and misters in a house, they are great impediments to the diversions of the servants; the only remedy is to bribe them, that they may not tell tales.
11. One who teaches; a teacher.
Vary few n en are wile by their own counel, or learned

by their own teaching; for he that was only taught by himself had a fool to his master.
To the Jews join the Egyptians, the first masters of learning.

Masters and teachers should not raise difficulties to their scholars; but smoothe their way, and help them forwards.
12. A man eminently skilful in practice or science.
The great mocking master mock'd not then,
When he said, Truth was buried here below.
Spenser and Fairfax, great masters of our language, saw much farther into the beauties of our numbers than those who followed.

A man must not only be able to judge of words and style, but he must be a master of them too; he must perfectly understand his author's tongue, and absolutely command his own.
He that does not pretend to painting, is not touch'd at the commendation of a master in that profession.
No care is taken to improve young men in their own language, that they may thoroughly understand, and be masters of it.
13. A title of dignity in the universities; as, master of arts.

1. To be a master to; to rule; to govern.
Ay, good faith,
And rather father thee, than master thee.
2. To conquer; to overpower; to subdue.
Thrice blessed they that master to their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage.
The princes of Germany did not think him sent to command the empire, who was neither able to rule his insolent subjects in England, nor master his rebellious people of Ireland.

Then comes some third party, that masters both plaintiff and defendant, and carries away the booty.
Honour burns in me, not so fiercely bright,
But pale as fires when master'd by the light.
Obstinacy and wilful neglects must be mastered, even though it cost blows.
A man can no more justly make use of another's necessity, than he that has more strength can seize upon a weaker, master him to his obedience, and, with a dagger at his throat, offer him death or slavery.
The reformation of an habitual sinner is a work of time and patience; evil customs must be mastered and subdued by degrees.
3. To execute with skill.
I do not take myself to be so perfect in the transactions and privileges of Bohemia, as to be fit to handle that part: and I will not offer at that I cannot master.

MA'STERDOM. n. f. [from maſter.] Dominion; rule. Not in use.
You shall put
This night's great business into my dispatch,
Which shall to all our nights and days to come Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

MA'STER-HAND. n. f. The hand of a man eminently skilful.
Musick resembles poetry, in each
Are nameless graces which no methods teach,
And which a master-hand alone can reach.
MA'STER-TEST. n. f. Principal test.
Who shall break the master-jest,
And what, and how, upon the rest.
MA'STER-KEY. n. f. The key which opens many locks, of which the subordinate keys open each only one.
This master-key
Frees every lock, and leads us to his person.

MA'STER-LEAVER. n. f. One that leaves or deserts his master.
Oh Antony,
Nobler than my revolt is infamous,
Forgive me in thine own particular;
But let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver, and a fugitive.

MA'STER-SINEW. n. f.
The master-sinew is a large sinew that furrounds the hough, and divides it from the bone by a hollow place, where the wind-galls are usually seated, which is the largest and most visible sinew in a horse's body; this oftentimes is relaxed or retrained.

MA'STER-STRING. n. f. Principal string.
He touch'd me
Ev'n on the tend'rest point; the master-string
That makes most harmony or discord to me.
I own the glorious subject fires my breast.
MA'STER-STROKE. n. f. Capital performance.
Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace;
Tell how your search has here eluded been,
How oft amaz'd, and ravish'd you have seen,
The conduct, prudence, and stupendous art,
And master-strokes in each mechanick part.

M A S

MA'STERLESS. adj. [from maſter.]
1. Wanting a master or owner.
When all was past took up his forlorn weed,
His silver shield now idle masterless.

The foul opinion
You had of her pure honour, gains, or loses,
Your sword or mine; or masterless leaves both
To who shall find them.
2. Ungoverned; unblubbued.
MA'STERLINESS. n. f. [from maſterly.] Eminent skill.
MA'STERLY. adv. With the skill of a master.
Thou dost speak masterly

Young though thou art.
I read a book; I think it very masterly written.
MA'STERLY. adj. [from maſter.]
1. Suitable to a master; artful; skilful.
As for the warmth of fancy, the masterly figures, and the copiousness of imagination, he has exceeded all others.

That clearer strokes of masterly design,
Of wise contrivance, and of judgment shine,
In all the parts of nature we assert,
Than in the brightest works of human art.
A man either discovers new beauties, or receives stronger impressions from the masterly strokes of a great author every time he peruses him.
2. Impetuous; with the sway of a master.
MA'STERPIECE. n. f. [from maſter and piece.]
1. Capital performance; any thing done or made with extraordinary skill.
This is the masterpiece, and most excellent part, of the work of reformation, and is worthy of his majesty's pains.

'Tis done; and 'twas my masterpiece, to work
My safety, 'twixt two dangerous extremes;
Scylla and Charybdis.
Let those consider this who look upon it as a piece of art, and the masterpiece of conversation, to deceive, and make a prey of a credulous and well-meaning honesty.
This wondrous masterpiece I fain would see;
This fatal Helen, who can was inspire.
The fiftenth is the masterpiece of the whole metamorphoses.
In the first ages, when the great souls, and masterpieces of human nature, were produced, men shined by a noble simplicity of behaviour.
2. Chief excellence.
Beating up of quarters was his masterpiece.
Diffimulation was his masterpiece; in which he so much excelled, that men were not ashamed with being deceived but twice by him.

MA'STERSHIP. n. f. [from maſter.]
1. Dominion; rule; power.
2. Superiority; pre-eminence.
For Python slain he Pythian games decreed,
Where noble youths for mastership should strive,
To quito, to run, and steeds and chariots drive.
3. Chief work.
Two youths of royal blood, renown'd in fight,
The mastership of heav'n in face and mind.

4. Skill; knowledge.
You were used
To say extremity was the trier of spirits;
That when the sea was calm all boats alike
Shew'd mastership in floating.
5. A title of ironical respect.
How now, Signior Launce? what news with your master-ship?
MA'STER-TEETH. n. f. [from maſter and teeth.] The principal teeth.
Some living creatures have their master-teeth indented one within another like faws; as lions and dogs.
MA'STERWORD. n. f. [from maſter, and word, Saxon.]
The masterwort is a plant with a rose and umbellated flower, consisting of several petals, which are sometimes heart-shaped, and sometimes intire, ranged in a circle, and resting on the empalement; which afterward becomes a fruit, composed of two seeds, which are plain, almost oval, gently freaked and bordered, and generally casting their cover; to these marks must be added, that their leaves are winged, and pretty large: the root is used in medicine.

MA'STERWORT. n. f. [from maſter, and wort, Saxon.]
The masterwort is raised of seeds, or runners from the roots.
MA'STERY. n. f. [from maſter, French, from maſter.]
1. Dominion; rule.
If divided by mountains, they will fight for the mastery of the passages of the tops, and for the towns that stand upon the roots.
2. Superiority; pre-eminence.
If a man strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned except he thrive lawfully.
This is the case of those that will try masteries with their superiors, and bite that which is too hard.

Good men I suppose to live in a state of mortification; under a perpetual conflict with their bodily appetites, and struggling to get the mastery over them.

3. Skill.
Chief mastery to dissect,
With long and tedious havock, fabled knights;
In battles feign'd.
He could attain to a mastery in all languages, and found the depths of all arts and sciences.

To give sufficient sweetness, a mastery in the language is required: the poet must have a magazine of words, and have the art to manage his few vowels to the best advantage.
4. Attainment of skill or power.
The learning and mastery of a tongue being unpleasant in itself, should not be cumbered with any other difficulties.

MA'STFUL. adj. [from maſt.] Abounding in mast, or fruit of oak, beech or chefnut.
Some from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the mastful chefnut mates the flies.

MA'STICATION. n. f. [from maſticatio, Lat.] The act of chewing.
In birds there is no mastication, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw, and thence transferred into the gizzard.
Mastication is a necessary preparation of solid aliment, without which there can be no good digestion.

MA'STICATORY. n. f. [from maſticatoire, French.] A medicine to be chewed only, not swallowed.
Remember masticatories for the mouth.
Salivation and masticatories evacuate considerably; salivation many pints of phlegm in a day, and very much by chewing tobacco.

MA'STICH. n. f. [from maſtic, French.]
1. A kind of gum gathered from trees of the same name in Scio.
We may apply intercipients upon the temples of mastich; frontals may also be applied.

2. A kind of mortar or cement.
As for the small particles of brick and stone, the least moistness would join them together, and turn them into a kind of mastich, which those insects could not divide.
MA'STICOT. n. f. [from maſtic, Latin.] See MASSICOT.
Grind your masticot with a small quantity of saffron in gum water.

MAT

He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eye-brows hung his matted hair.
The spleen consisteth of muscular fibres, all matted, as in the skin, but in more open work. Dryden.
MA'TADORE. n. f. [matador, a murderer, Spanish.] A hand of cards so called from its efficacy against the adverse player.
Now move to war her sable matadores,
In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors.
MA'TACHIN. n. f. [French.] An old dance. Pope.
Who ever saw a matadin dance to imitate fighting: this was a fight that did imitate the matadin; for they being but three that fought, every one had two adversaries striking him who struck the third. Sidney.
MATCH. n. f. [meche, French; miccia, Italian; probably from mico, to shine, Latin: surely not, as Skinner conjectures, from the Saxon maca, a companion, because a match is companion to a gun.] Any thing that catches fire; generally a card, rope, or small chip of wood dipped in melted sulphur.
Try them in several bottles matches, and see which of them last longest without stench. Bacon.
He made use of her trees as of matches to set Drina a fire.
Being willing to try something that would not cherish much fire at once, and would keep fire much longer than a coal, we took a piece of match, such as soldiers use. Boyle.
2. [From ματχ, a fight, or from maca, Saxon, one equal to another.] A contest; a game; any thing in which there is contest or opposition.
Shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears? Shakespeare.
The goat was mine, by finging fairly won.
A solemn match was made; he lost the prize. Dryden.
3. [From maca, Saxon.] One equal to another; one able to contest or opposition.
Government mitigates the inequality of power among particular persons, and makes an innocent man, though of the lowest rank, a match for the mightiest of his fellow-subjects.
The old man has met with his match. Addison's Freeholder.
The natural flame that attends vice, makes them zealous to encourage themselves by numbers, and form a party against religion: it is with pride they survey their increasing strength, and begin to think themselves a match for virtue. Rogers.
4. One that suits or tallies with another.
5. A marriage.
The match
Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities, Beseeming such a wife as your fair daughter. Shakespeare.
Love doth seldom suffer itself to be confined by other matches than those of its own making.
With him she strove to join Lavinia's hand,
But dire portents the purpos'd match withstand. Dryden.
6. One to be married.
She inherited a fair fortune of her own, and was very rich in a personal estate, and was looked upon as the richest match of the West. Clarendon, b. viii.
To MATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To be equal to.
No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
And every measure fail me. Shakespeare. King Lear.
2. To shew an equal.
No history or antiquity can match his policies and his conduct. South's Sermons.
3. To equal; to oppose.
Eternal might
To match with their inventions they presum'd
So easy, and of his thunder made a scorn. Milton.
What though his heart be great, his actions gallant,
He wants a crown to poise against a crown,
Birth to match birth, and power to balance power. Dryden.
The shepherd's calendar of Spenser is not to be matched in any modern language. Dryden.
4. To suit; to proportion.
Let poets match their subject to their strength,
And often try what weight they can support. Recommen.
Mine have been still Match'd with my birth; a younger brother's hopes. Rowe.
Employ their wit and humour in chusing and matching of patterns and colours. Swift's Miscel.
5. To marry; to give in marriage.
Great king,
I would not from your love make such a fray,
To match you where I hate. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Thou dost protest thy love, and would'st it show
By matching her, as she would match her foe. Donne.

MAT

Them willingly they would have still retain'd,
And match'd unto the prince. Daniel's Civil War.
When a man thinks himself match'd to one who should be a comfort to him, instead thereof he finds in his bosom a beast. South's Sermons.
A senator of Rome, while Rome surviv'd,
Would not have match'd his daughter with a king. Addison.
To MATCH. v. n.
1. To be married.
A thing that may luckily fall out to him that hath the blef-sing to match with some heroic-minded lady. Sidney, b. ii.
I hold it a sin to match in my kindred. Shakespeare.
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,
And every creature couple with his foe. Dryd. Sp. Fryar.
All creatures else are much unworthy thee,
They match'd, and thou alone art left for me. Dryden.
2. To suit; to be proportionate; to tally.
MA'TCHABLE. adj. [from match.]
1. Suitable; equal; fit to be joined.
Ye, whose high worths surpassing Paragon,
Could not on earth have found one fit for mate,
Ne but in heaven matchable to none,
Why did ye stoop unto so lowly state? Spenser, Sonnet 66.
2. Correspondent.
Those at land that are not matchable with any upon our shores, are of those very kinds which are found no where but in the deepest parts of the sea. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
MA'TCHLESS. adj. [from match.] Without an equal.
This happy day two lights are seen,
A glorious saint, a matchless queen. Waller.
Much less, in arms, oppose thy matchless force,
When thy sharp spurs shall urge thy foaming horse. Dryd.
MA'TCHLESSLY. n. f. In a manner not to be equalled.
MA'TCHLESSNESS. n. f. [from matchless.] State of being without an equal.
MA'TCHMAKER. n. f. [match and make.]
1. One who contrives marriages.
You came to him to know
If you should carry me, or no;
And would have hir'd him and his imps,
To be your matchmakers and pimps. Hudibras, p. iii.
2. One who makes matches to burn.
MATE. n. f. [maca, Saxon; maet, Dutch.]
1. A husband or wife.
I that am frail flesh and earthly wight,
Unworthy mate for such immortal mate,
Myself well wote, and mine unequal fate. Fairy Queen.
2. A companion, male or female.
Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakespeare.
My competitor.
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war. Shakespeare.
You knew me once no mate
For you; there sitting where you durst not soar. Milton.
Damon, behold you breaking purple cloud;
Hear'st thou not hymns and songs divinely loud:
There mounts Amyntas, the young cherubs play
About their godlike mate, and sing him on his way. Dryd.
Leave thy bride alone:
Go, leave her with her maiden mates to play
At sports more harmless, till the break of day. Dryden.
3. The male or female of animals.
Part single, or with mate;
Graze the sea-weed their pasture, and through groves
Of coral fray. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
Pliny tells us, that elephants know no copulation with any other than their own proper mate. Ayliffe's Parergon.
4. One that fails in the same ship.
What vengeance on the passing fleet she pour'd,
The master frighted, and the mates devour'd. Recommen.
5. One that eats at the same table.
6. The second in subordination; as, the master's mate; the chirurgion's mate.
To MATE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To match; to marry.
Ensample make of him your hapless joy,
And of myself now mated as you see,
Whose prouder vaunt, that proud avenging boy,
Did soon pluck down, and curb'd my liberty. Fairy Qu.
The hind, that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.
2. To be equal to.
Some from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the matful chestnut mates the skies. Dryden.
Parnassus is its name; whose fork'd rise
Mounts through the clouds, and mates the lofty skies:
High on the summit of this dubious cliff,
Deucalion wafting moor'd his little skiff. Dryden.
3. To

MAT

To oppose; to equal.
I i' th' way of loyalty and truth,
Dare mate a founder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
4. [Mater, French; matar, Spanish.] To subdue; to confound; to crush.
That is good deceit
Which mates him first, that first intends deceit. Shakespeare.
The great effects that may come of industry and perseverance who knoweth not? For audacity doth almost bind and mate the weaker sort of minds. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
My sense the 'as mated, and amaz'd my fight. Shakespeare.
Why this is strange; go call the abbess hither;
I think you are all mated, or stark mad. Shakespeare.
MATERIAL. adj. [materiel, French; materialis, Latin.]
1. Consisting of matter; corporeal; not spiritual.
When we judge, our minds we mirrors make;
And as those glasses which material be,
Forms of material things do only take,
For thoughts or minds in them we cannot see. Davies.
That these trees of life and knowledge were material trees, though figures of the law and the gospel, it is not doubted
by the most religious and learned writers. Raleigh.
2. Important; momentous; essential.
We must propose unto all men certain petitions incident, and very material in causes of this nature. Hooker, b. v.
Hold them for catholics or heretics, it is not a thing either one way or another, in this present question, material.
Hooker, b. iv.
What part of the world forever we fall into, the ordinary use of this very prayer hath, with equal continuance, accompanied the fame, as one of the principal and most mate- rial duties of honour done to Christ. Hooker, b. v.
It may discover some secret meaning and intent therein, very material to the state of that government. Spenser.
The question is not, whether you allow or disallow that book, neither is it material. Whitgift.
He would not stay at your petitions made;
His business more material. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
Neither is this a question of words, but infinitely material in nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N.º 98.
I pass the rest, whose every race and name,
And kinds are less material to my theme. Dryden's Virg.
As for the more material faults of writing, though I see many of them, I want leisure to amend them. Dryden.
I shall, in the account of simple ideas, set down only such as are most material to our present purpose. Locke.
In this material point, the constitution of the English government far exceeds all others. Swift.
MATERIALS. n. f. [this word is scarcely used in the singular; materialia, French.] The substance of which any thing is made.
The West-Indians, and many nations of the Africans, finding means and materials, have been taught, by their own necessities, to pass rivers in a boat of one tree. Raleigh.
Intending an accurate enumeration of medical materials, the omission hereof affords some probability it was not used by the ancients. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. i.
David, who made such rich provision of materials for the building of the temple, because he had dip't his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile. South.
That lamp in one of the heathen temples the art of man might make of some such material as the stone asbestus, which being once kindled will burn without being consumed. Wilk.
The materials of that building very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them. Tillotson.
Simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested to the mind only by sensation and reflection. Locke.
Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a palace to the ground,
Only to have the ruins made
Materials for an house decay'd. Swift's Miscel.
MATERIALIST. n. f. [from material.] One who denies spiritual substances.
He was bent upon making Memmius a materialist. Dryd.
MATERIALITY. n. f. [materialité, Fr. from material.] Cor-poreity; material existence; not spirituality.
Considering that corporeity could not agree with this universal subsistent nature, abstracting from all materiality in his ideas, and giving them an actual subsistence in nature, he made them like angels, whose essences were to be the essence, and to give existence to corporeal individuals; and so each idea was embodied in every individual of its species. Digby.
MATERIALLY. adv. [from material.]
1. In the state of matter.
I do not mean, that any thing is separable from a body by fire that was not materially pre-existent in it. Boyle.
2. Not formally.
Though an ill intention is certainly sufficient to spoil and corrupt an act in itself materially good, yet no good intention whatsoever can rectify or infuse a moral goodness into an act otherwise evil. South's Sermons.

MAT

3. Importantly; essentially.
All this concerneth the customs of the Irish very materially;
as well to reform those which are evil, as to confirm and continue those which are good. Spenser on Ireland.
MATERIALNESS. n. f. [from material.] State of being material; importance.
MATERIATE. } adj. [materiatus, Latin.] Consisting of mat-MATERIATED. } ter.
After long enquiry of things immerse in matter, interpose some subject which is immaterial or less material, such as this of sounds, to the end that the intellect may be rectified, and become not partial. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N.º 114.
MATERIATION. n. f. [from materia, Lat.] The act of forming matter.
Creation is the production of all things out of nothing; a formation not only of matter but of form, and a materiation even of matter itself. Brown.
MATERNAL. adj. [maternus, Fr. maternus, Lat.] Motherly; befitting or pertaining to a mother.
The babe had all that infant care beguiles,
And early knew his mother in her smiles:
At his first aptness the maternal love
Those rudiments of reason did improve. Dryden.
MATERNITY. n. f. [maternité, French, from maternus, Lat.]
The character or relation of a mother.
MAT-RELOIN. n. f. [mater, to kill, and selon, a thief.] A species of knap-weed growing wild.
MATHEMATICAL. } adj. [mathematicus, Lat.] Considered MATHEMATICK. } according to the doctrine of the mathematicians.
The East and West,
Upon the globe, a mathematick point
Only divides: thus happiness and misery,
And all extremes, are still contiguous. Denham's Sophy.
It is as impossible for an aggregate of finites to comprehend or exhaust one infinite, as it is for the greatest number of ma- thematick points to amount to, or constitute a body. Boyle.
I suppose all the particles of matter to be situated in an exact and mathematical evenness. Bentley's Serm.
MATHEMATICALITY. adv. [from mathematick.] According to the laws of the mathematical sciences.
We may be mathematically certain, that the heat of the sun is according to the density of the sun-beams, and is reci-procally proportional to the square of the distance from the body of the sun. Bentley's Sermons.
MATHEMATICIAN. n. f. [mathematicus, Lat. mathematician, French.] A man versed in the mathematics.
One of the most eminent mathematicians of the age assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Aeneas's voyage by the map. Addison's Spect.
MATHEMATICKS. n. f. [μαθηματικα.] That science which contemplates whatever is capable of being numbered or measured; and it is either pure or mixt: pure considers abstracted quantity, without any relation to matter; mixt is interwoven with physical considerations. Harris.
The mathematicks and the metaphysics
Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you. Shak.
See mystery to mathematicks fly. Pope.
MATHE'S. n. f. An herb. Ainsl.

used in the morning.
Up rose the victor angels, and to arms
The matin trumpet sung. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
I waste the matin lamp in sighs for thee;
Thy image steals between my god and me. Pope.
MATIN. n. f. Morning.
The glow-worm shews the matin to be near,
And gins to pale his uneffectual fire. Shakespeare.
MATINS. n. f. [matines, French.] Morning worship.
The winged choristers began
To chirp their matins. Cleveland.
By the pontifical, no altar is consecrated without reliques:
the vigils are celebrated before them, and the noëurn and matins, for the saints whose the reliques are. Stillingfleet.
That he should raise his mitred crest on high,
And clap his wings, and call his family
To sacred rites; and vex th' ethereal powers
With midnight matins, at uncivil hours. Dryden.
MATRASS. n. f. [matras, French.]
Matrass is the name of a chemical glass vessel made for digestion or distillation, being sometimes bellied, and sometimes rising gradually taper into a conical figure. Quincy.
Protect from violent storms, and the too parching darts of the sun, your pennached tulips and ranunculus's, covering them with matrasses. Evelyn's Calendar.

MA'TRICE.

MAT

MA'TRICE. n. f. [matrix, Latin.]

1. The womb; the cavity where the fetus is formed.
If the time required in vivification be of any length, the spirit will exhale before the creature be mature, except it be enclosed in a place where it may have continuance of the heat, and closeness that may keep it from exhaling; and such places are the wombs and matrices of the females. Bacon.
2. A mould; that which gives form to something inclosed.
Stones that carry a resemblance of cockles, were formed in the cavities of shells; and these shells have served as matrices or moulds to them. Woodward.

MA'TRICE. n. f. [matricidium, Latin.]

1. Slaughter of a mother.
Nature compensates the death of the father by the matricide and murder of the mother. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
2. [Matricida, Latin; matricides, Fr.] A mother killer. Ainsl.
To MATR'ICULATE. v. a. [from matricula: a matrix, quod ea velut matrice continetur militum nomina. Ainsl.] To enter or admit to a membership of the universities of England; to enlist; to enter into any society by setting down the name.
He, after some trial of his manners and learning, thought fit to enter himself of that college, and after to matriculate him in the university. Walton's Life of Sanderson.

MATR'ICULATE. n. f. [from the verb.] A man matriculated.
Suffer me, in the name of the matriculates of that famous university, to ask them some plain questions. Arbutnot.

MATR'ICULATION. n. f. [from matriculate.] The act of matriculating.

1. A scholar absent from the university for five years, is struck out of the matriculation book; and, upon his coming de novo to the university, ought to be again matriculated. Ayliffe.
- MATRIMONIAL. adj. [matrimonial, Fr. from matrimonium, Latin.] Suitable to marriage; pertaining to marriage; conubial; nuptial; hymeneal.
If he relied upon that title, he could be but a king at curtsy, and have rather a matrimonial than a regal power, the right remaining in his queen. Bacon's Henry VII.

So spake domestic Adam in his care,
And matrimonial love. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

Since I am turn'd the husband, you the wife;
The matrimonial victory is mine, Dryden.

MATRIMONIALLY. adv. [from matrimonial.] According to the manner or laws of marriage.
He is so matrimonially wedded unto his church, that he cannot quit the same, even on the score of going unto a religious house. Ayliffe's Paragon.

MATRIMONY. n. f. [matrimonium, Lat.] Marriage; the nuptial state; the contract of man and wife; nuptials.
If any know cause why this couple should not be joined in holy matrimony, they are to declare it. Common Prayer.

MATR'IX. n. f. [Lat. matrice, Fr.] Womb; a place where any thing is generated or formed.
If they be not lodged in a convenient matrix, they are not excited by the efficacy of the fun. Brown's Vulgar Err.

MATRONLY. adj. matron and like.] Elderly; ancient.
The matronly wife plucked out all the brown hairs, and the younger the white. L'Estrange's Fables.

MATROSS. n. f.
Matrosses, in the train of artillery, are a sort of soldiers next in degree under the gunners, who assist about the guns in traversing, spunging, firing, and loading them: they carry firelocks, and march along with the store-waggons as a guard, and as assistants, in case a waggon should break. Bailey.

MAT'TER. n. f. [matiere, French; materia, Latin.]
1. Body; substance extended.
If then the foul another foul do make,
Because her power is kept within a bound,
She must some former stuff or matter take,
But in the foul there is no matter found.
It seems probable to me, that God in the beginning formed matter in solid, massy, hard, impenetrable, moveable particles, of such sizes and figures, and with such other properties, and in such proportion to space, as most conduced to the end for which he formed them; and that those primitive particles being solids are incomparably harder than any porous bodies compounded of them, even so very hard as never to wear or break in pieces, no ordinary power being able to divide what God himself made one in the first creation. Newt.

Some have dimensions of length, breadth, and depth, and have also a power of resistance, or exclude every thing of the same kind from being in the same place: this is the proper character of matter or body. Watts's Logic.

2. Materials; that of which any thing is composed.
The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.

3. Subject; thing treated.
The subject or matter of laws in general is thus far forth constant, which matter is that for the ordering whereof laws were instituted.
I have words to speak in thy ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the matter. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Son of God, Saviour of men! Thy name
Shall be the copious matter of my song. Milt. Par. Lost.

It is matter of the greatest astonishment to observe the common boldness of men.
I shall turn
Full fraught with joyful tidings of these works,
New matter of his praise, and of our songs. Dryden.

He grants the deluge to have come so very near the matter, that but very few escaped.
This is so certain in true philosophy, that it is matter of astonishment to me how it came to be doubted. Cheyne.

Be thou the copious matter of my song. Phillips.

4. The whole; the very thing supposed.

MAY

I had some repute for prose;
And, till they drove me out of date,
Could maul a minister of state.
But fate with butchers plac'd thy priestly stall,
Meek modern faith to murder, hack and maul.
MAUL. n. f. [malles, Latin.] A heavy hammer.
A man that beareth false witness is a maul, a sword, and sharp arrow.
MAUND. n. f. [manb, Saxon; mande, Fr.] A hand-basket.
To MAUNDER. v. n. [maudire, French.] To grumble; to murmur.
He made me many visits, maundring as if I had done him a discourtesy in leaving such an opening. Wife's Surgery.
MAUNDERER. n. f. [from maunder.] A murmurer; a grumbler.
MAUNDY-THURSDAY. n. f. [derived by Spelman from mande, a hand-basket, in which the king was accustomed to give alms to the poor.] The Thursday before Good-friday.
MAUSOLEUM. n. f. [Latin; mausoleus, French.] A name which was first given to a stately monument erected by his queen Artimisia to her husband Mausolus, king of Caria.
A pompous funeral monument.
MAW. n. f. [maga, Saxon; maeghe, Dutch.]
1. The stomach of animals, and of human beings, in com-tempt.
So oft in feasts with costly changes clad,
To crammed maus a sprat new stomach brings.
We have heats of dungs, and of bellies and maus of living creatures, and of their bloods.
Though plenteous, all too little seems,
To stuff this mau, this vast unhidebound corps.
The serpent, who his mau obscene had fill'd,
The branches in his curl'd embraces held.
2. The craw of birds.
Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill; their mau is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it down by degrees into the stomach, where it is ground by two strong muscles; in which action they are assisted by small stones, which they swallow for the purpose.
MAWKISH. adj. [perhaps from mau.] Apt to give satiety;
apt to cause loathing.
Flow, Wellfed! flow, like thine inspirer beer,
So sweetly mauwish, and so smoothly dull.
MAWKISHNESS. n. f. [from mauwish.] Aptness to cause loathing.
MA'WMET. n. f. [or mammet, from mam or mother.] A puppet, anciently an idol.
MA'WMISH. adj. [from mauwm or mauwmnet.] Foolish; idle;
nauseous.
It is one of the most nauseous, mauwish mortifications, for a man of sense to have to do with a punctual, finical top.
MAW-WORM. n. f. [mau and worm.]
Ordinary gut-worms loosen, and slide off from, the intern tunic of the guts, and frequently creep into the stomach for nourishment, being attracted thither by the sweet chyle; whence they are called stomach or mau-worms.
MA'XILLAR. adj. [maxillaris, Latin.] Belonging to the MA'XILLARY. s. jaw-bone.
The greatest quantity of hard substance continued is towards the head; there is the skull, the teeth, and the maxillary bones.
MA'XIM. n. f. [maxime, French; maximum, Lat.] An axiom;
a general principle; a leading truth.
This maxim out of love I teach.
It is a maxim in state, that all countries of new conquest, till settled, are rather matters of burden than of strength.
Yet, as in duty bound, they serve him on;
Nor ease, nor wealth, nor life itself regard,
For 'tis their maxim, love is love's reward.
That the temper, the sentiments, the morality of men, is influenced by the example and disposition of those they converse with, is a reflexion which has long since passed into proverbs, and been ranked among the standing maxims of human wisdom.
MAY, auxiliary verb, preterite might. [magan, Saxon; mighen, Dutch.]
1. To be at liberty; to be permitted; to be allowed; as, you

MAY

4. To have power.
This also tendeth to no more but what the king may do:
for what he may do is of two kinds; what he may do as just,
and what he may do as possible.
Make the most of life you may.
5. A word expressing desire.
May you live happily and long for the service of your country.
MAY-be. Perhaps.
May-be, that better reason will assuage
The rash revenger's heart, words well dispos'd
Have secret pow'r to appease inflamed rage.
May-be, the am'rous count solicits her
In the unlawful purpose.
'Tis nothing yet, yet all thou hast to give;
Then add those may-be years thou hast to live.
What they offer is bare may-be and shift, and scarce ever amounts to a tolerable reason.
MAY. n. f. [Maius, Latin.] The fifth month of the year; the confine of Spring and Summer; the early or gay part of life.
On a day, alack the day!
Love, whose month is ever May,
Spied a blossom passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air.
Maidens are May when they are maids,
But the sky changes when they are wives.
Is in the very May-morn of his youth,
Ripe for exploits.
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare;
Despight his nice fence, and his active practice,
His May of youth, and bloom of luthood.
May must be drawn with a sweet and amiable countenance, clad in a robe of white and green, embroidered with daisies, hawthorns, and blue-bottles.
Hail! bounteous May, that dost inspire
Mirth and youth, and warm desire;
Woods and groves are of thy dressing,
Hill and dale doth boast thy blessing.
To MAY. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather flowers on May morning.
When merry May first early calls the morn,
With merry maids a *may*ing they do go.
Cupid with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a *may*ing.
MAY-BUG. n. f. [May and bug.] A chaffer.
MAY-DAY. n. f. [May and day.] The first of May.
'Tis as much impossible,
Unless we sweep them from the door with cannons,
To scatter 'em, as 'tis to make 'em sleep
On May-day morning.
MAY-FLOWER. n. f. [May and flower.] A plant.
The plague, they report, hath a scent of the May-flower.
MAY-FLY. n. f. [May and fly.] An insect.
He loves the May-fly, which is bred of the cod-worm or caddis.
MAY-GAME. n. f. [May and game.] Diversion; sport; such as are used on the first of May.
The king this while, though he seem'd to account of the designs of Perkin but as a May-game, yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts.
Like early lovers, whose unpractis'd hearts
Were long the May-game of malicious arts,
When once they find their jealousies were vain,
With double heat renew their fires again.
MAY-LILY. n. f. The same with lily of the valley.
MAY-POLE. n. f. [May and pole.] Pole to be danced round in May.
Amid the area wide she took her stand,
Where the tall May-pole once o'er-look'd the strand.
MAY-WEED. n. f. [May and weed.] A species of chamomile, called also flinking chamomile, which grows wild.
The Maie-weed doth burne, and the thistle doth treat,
The fitches pul downward both rie and the wheat.
MAYOR. n. f. [major, Lat.] The chief magistrate of a corporation, who, in London and York, is called Lord Mayor.
My Lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you.
When the king once heard it; out of anger,
He sent command to the lord mayor straight
To stop the rumour.
The mayor of this town locked up the gates of the city.
Wouldst thou not rather chuse a small renown,
To be the mayor of some poor, paltzy town.
MAYORALTY. n. f. [from mayor.] The office of a mayor.
It is incorporated with a mayoralty, and nameth burgesses to the parliament.
There was a sharp prosecution against Sir William Capel, for misgovernment in his mayoralty.
MAYORESS. n. f. [from mayor.] The wife of the mayor.
MA'ZARD.

MEA

MA'ZARD. n. f. [maichaire, French.] A jaw.
Now my lady Worm's chapels, and knockt about the mazard with a sexton's spade.
Where thou might'st stickle without hazard
Of outrage to thy hide and mazard.
MAZE. n. f. [missen, Dutch, to mistake; maze, a whirlpool,
Skinner.]
1. A labyrinth; a place of perplexity and winding passages.
He, like a copious river, pour'd his song
O'er all the mazes of enchanted ground.
2. Confusion of thought; uncertainty; perplexity.
He left in himself nothing but a maze of longing, and a dungeon of sorrow.
While they study how to bring to pass that religion may seem but a matter made, they lose themselves in the very maze of their own discourses, as if reason did even purposely forake them, who of purpose forsake God, the author thereof.
I have thrust myself into this maze,
Haply to wive and thrive as best I may.
To MAZE. v. a. [from the noun.] To bewilder; to confuse.
Much was I maz'd to see this monster kind,
In hundred forms to change his fearful hue.
MA'ZV. adj. [from maze.] Perplexed; confused.
The Lapithæ to chariots add the state
Of bits and bridles, taught the steed to bound,
To run the ring, and trace the mazy round.
MA'ZER. n. f. [maiser, Dutch, a knot of maple.] A maple cup.
Then, lo! Perigot, the pledge which I plight,
A mazer ywrought of the maple ware,
Wherein is enchafted many a fair fight
Of bears and tygers that make fierce war.
Virgil observes, like Theocritus, a just decorum, both of the subject and the persons, as particularly in the third pastoral, where one of his shepherds describes a bowl, or mazer, curiously carved.
M. D. Medicine doctor, doctor of physick.
Me,
1. The oblique case of I.
Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread an interdicted shore.
For me the fates severely kind, ordain
A cool suspence.
2. Me is sometimes a kind of ludicrous expletive.
He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentlemanlike dogs, under the duke's table.
He presently, as greatness knows itself,
Steps me a little higher than his vow
Made to my father, while his blood was poor.
I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs.
I followed me close, came in foot and hand, and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid.
3. It is sometimes used ungrammatically for I; as, methinks.
Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your countrey.
ME'ACOCK. n. f. [mes cogn. Skinner.] An uxorious or effeminate man.
ME'ACOCK. adj. Tame; timorous; cowardly.
'Tis a world to see,
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock wretch can make the curtest frow.
MEAD. n. f. [mæeo, Saxon; meeth, Dutch; meth, German;
bydromeli, Lat.] A kind of drink made of water and honey.
Though not so solutive a drink as mead, yet it will be more grateful to the stomach.
He sheers his over-burden'd sheep;
Or mead for cooling drink prepares;
Of virgin honey in the jars.
MEAD. n. f. [mæeo, Sax.] Ground somewhat watery, not MEADOW. s. plowed, but covered with grass and flowers.
Where al thing in common do rest,
Come feed with the pasture and mead,
Yet what doth it stand you in stead?
A hand select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground.
Paints her, 'tis true, with the same hand which spreads,
Like glorious colours, through the flow'ry meads,
When lavish nature with her best attire
Cloaths the gay spring, the season of desire.
Yet ere to-morrow's sun shall show his head,
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
For crowns and chaplets to adorn thy bed.
MEADOW-SAFFRON. n. f. [colchicum, Lat.] A plant.
The meadow-saffron hath a flower consisting of one leaf, shaped like a lily, rising in form of a small tube, and is gradually widened into six segments: it has likewise a solid, bulbous root, covered with a membranous skin.
MEADOW-SWEET. n. f. [ulmaria, Lat.] A plant.

MEA

The meadow-sweet hath a flower composed of several leaves placed in a circular order, and expanding in form of a rose, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit composed of many little membranous crooked huffs gathered into an head, each of which generally contains one seed.
ME'AGER. adj. [maigre, French; macer, Latin.]
1. Lean; wanting flesh; starven.
Thou art to lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gate.
Now will the canker sorrow eat my bud,
And chafe the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit.
Meagre were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones.
Whatever their neighbour gets, they lose, and the very bread that one eats makes t'other meagre.
The recking entrails
He to his meagre maffiffs made a prey.
Fierce famine with her meagre face,
And fevers of the fiery race,
In swarms th' offending wretch surround,
All brooding on the blasted ground,
And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date.
2. Poor; hungry.
Canaan's happy land, when worn with toil,
Requir'd a Sabbath year to mend the meagre soil.
To ME'AGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To make lean.
It cannot be, that I should be so shamefully betrayed, and as a man meagered with long watching and painful labour, laid himself down to sleep.
ME'AGERNESS. n. f. [from meager.]
1. Leanness; want of flesh.
2. Scantness; bareness.
Poynings, the better to make compensation of the meager-ness of his service in the wars by acts of peace, called a parliament.
MEAK. n. f. A hook with a long handle.
A meake for the pease, and to swing up the brake.
MEAL. n. f. [male, Saxon, repast or portion.]
1. The act of eating at a certain time.
Boaz said unto her at meal time, Come eat, and dip thy morfel.
The quantity of aliment necessary to keep the animal in a due state of vigour, ought to be divided into meals at proper intervals.
2. A repast.
What strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee?
Give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils.
They made me a miser's feast of happiness,
And cou'd not furnish out another meal.
3. A part; a fragment.
That yearly rent is still paid into the hanaper, even as the former casualty itself was wont to be, in parcel meals brought in, and answered there.
4. [maele, Saxon; meel, Dutch; mahlen, to grind, German.] The flower or edible part of corn.
In the bolting and sifting of near fourteen years of such power and favour, all that came out could not be expected to be pure and fine meal, but must have a mixture of padar and bran in this lower age of human fragility.
An old weazel conveys himself into a meal-tub for the mice to come to her, since she could not go to them.
To MEAL. v. a. [meler, French.] To sprinkle; to mingle.
Were he meal'd
With that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous.
ME'ALMAN. n. f. [meal and man.] One that deals in meal.
ME'ALY. adj. [from meal.]
1. Having the taste or soft insipidity of meal; having the qualities of meal.
The mealy parts of plants dissolved in water make too vis-cid an aliment.
2. Besprinkled, as with meal.
With four wings, as all farinaceous and mealy-winged animals, as butterflies and moths.
Like a gay insect, in his summer shine,
The sop light fluttering spreads his mealy wings.
MEALY-MOUTHED. adj. [imagined by Skinner to be corrupted from mild-mouthed or mellow-mouthed: but perhaps from the fore mouths of animals, that, when they are unable to communicate their grain, must be fed with meal.] Soft mouthed;
unable to speak freely.
She was a fool to be mealy-mouthed where nature speaks so plain.
MEALY-MOUTHEDNESS. n. f. [from the adjective.] Bathful-ness; restraint of speech.

ME A

MEAN. adj. [mean, Saxon.]

1. Wanting dignity; of low rank or birth.
She was stricken with most obstinate love to a young man but of mean parentage, in her father's court, named Antiphus; so mean, as that he was but the son of her nurse, and by that means, without other desert, became known of her.
Sidney, b. ii.

This fairest maid of fairer mind;
By fortune mean, in nature born a queen.
Let pale-fac'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
And find no harbour in a royal heart. Shaksp. Henry VI.
True hope is swift, and flies with swallow wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures, kings. Shak.

2. Low-minded; base; ungenerous; spiritless.
The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,
More than I know the found of Marcius' tongue
From every meaner man. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Can you imagine I so mean could prove,
To save my life by changing of my love? Dryden.
We fast not to please men, nor to promote any mean, worldly interest. Smalridge's Sermons.

3. Contemptible; despicable.
The Roman legions, and great Cæsar found
Our fathers no mean foes. Philips.
I have sacrific'd much of my own self-love, in preventing not only many mean things from seeing the light, but many which I thought tolerable. Pope.

4. Low in the degree of any property; low in worth; low in power.
Some things are good, yet in so mean a degree of goodness, that many are only not disproved nor disallowed of God for them.
The lands he not holden of her majesty in chief, but by a mean tenure in fockage, or by knight's service at the most.
Hooker, b. ii.

By this extortion he suddenly grew from a mean to a mighty estate, inasmuch that his ancient inheritance being not one thousand marks yearly, he became able to dispense ten thousand pounds. Davies on Ireland.

To peaceful Rome new laws ordain;
Call'd from his mean abode a sceptre to sustain. Dryden.
5. [Mean, French.] Middle; moderate; without excess.
He saw this gentleman, one of the properest and best-graced men that ever I saw, being of middle age and a mean

Now read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton on Education.

6. Intervening; intermediate.
In the mean while the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. 1 Kings xviii. 45.
There is French wheat, which is bearded, and requirith the best soil, recompensing the same with a profitable plenty;
and not wheat, so termed because it is unbearded, is contented with a meaner earth, and contenting with a suitable gain.
Carew on Cornwall.

MEAN. n. f. [mean, French.]
1. Mediocrity; middle rate; medium.
Of 'tis seen,
Our mean securities, and our mere defects Prove our commodities. Shaksp. King Lear.

Temperance with golden square,
Betwixt them both can measure out a mean. Shaksp.
There is a mean in all things, and a certain measure wherein the good and the beautiful consist, and out of which they never can depart. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

But no authority of gods or men
Allow of any mean in poësie. Roscommon.
Against her then her forces prudence joins,
And to the golden mean herself confines. Denham.

2. Measure; regulation.
The rolling sea refounding soft,
In his big bafe them fitly answered,
And on the rock the waves breaking aloft,
A solemn mean unto them measured. Fairy Queen.

3. Interval; interim; mean time.
But fith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish rather than of crime hath been,
Reserve her cause to her eternal doom,
And in the mean vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Fairy Queen.

4. Instrument; measure; that which is used in order to any end.
Pamela's noble heart would needs gratefully make known the valiant mean of her safety. Sidney, b. i.
As long as that which Christians did was good, and no way subject to just reproach, their virtuous conversation was a mean to work the Heathens conversion unto Christ. Hooker.

It is no excuse unto him who, being drunk, committeth incest, and alledgeth that his wits were not his own; in as much as himself might have chosen whether his wits should by that mean have been taken from him. Hooker, b. i.

ME A

He tempering goodly well
Their contrary dislikes with loved means,
Did place them all in order, and compell
To keep themselves within their fundry reigns,
Together link'd with adamantine chains.
I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free. Shaksp. Othello.

No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by Cæsar and by you cut off. Shaksp. Othello.
Nature is made better by no mean,
But nature makes that mean; so over that art
Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art
That nature makes. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Your doctrine leads them to look on this end as essential, and on the means as indifferent. Lord Bolingbroke to Swift.
5. It is often used in the plural, and by some not very grammatically with an adjective singular.

The more base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such flight conditions. Shaksp. Othello.
By this means he had them the more at vantage, being tired and harraled with a long march. Bacon's Henry III.
Because he wanted means to perform any great action, he made means to return the sooner. Davies on Ireland.

Strong was their plot,
Their parties great, means good, the season fit,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not. Daniel.
By this means not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation will be bred up not perverted by any other hopes. Sprat's Sermons.

Who is there that hath the leisure and meant to collect all the proofs concerning most of the opinions he has, so as safely to conclude that he hath a clear and full view. Locke.
A good character, when established, should not be relied in as an end, but only employed as a means of doing still farther good. Atterbury's Sermons.

It renders us careless of approving ourselves to God by religious duties, and, by that means, securing the continuance of his goodness. Atterbury's Sermons.
6. By all MEANS. Without doubt; without hesitation; without fail.

7. By no MEANS. Not in any degree; not at all.
The wine on this side of the lake is by no means so good as that on the other. Addison on Italy.

8. Means are likewise used for revenue; fortune; probably from desimene.
Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.
Shaksp. Henry IV.

Rust sword; cool bluffs; and, parolles, live
Safe in flame! being fool'd, by foolry thrive;
There's place and means for every man alive. Shaksp.
For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil;
And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,
Give you advancement. Shaksp. Henry IV.

Effect did not build or adorn any house; the queen perchance spending his time, and himself his means. Watson.
9. MEAN-TIME. In the intervening time: sometimes an MEAN-WHILE. } adverbial mode of speech.

The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
New heav'n and earth. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
Mean-time the rapid heav'n's rowl'd down the light,
And on the shaded ocean rush'd the night. Dryden.

Mean-time her warlike brother on the seas,
His waving streamers to the winds displays. Dryden.
Mean time, in shades of night Æneas lies;
Care seiz'd his soul, and sleep forsook his eyes. Dryden.

Mean-while I'll draw up my Numidian troops,
And, as I see occasion, favour thee. Addison's Cato.
The Roman legions were all recalled to help their country against the Goths; mean-time the Britons, left to shift for themselves, and daily harraled by cruel inroads from the Picts, were forced to call in the Saxons for their defence. Swift.

TO MEAN. v. n. [meanen, Dutch.] To have in the mind; to intend; to purpose.
When your children shall say, What mean you by this fervice? ye shall say, It is the palfover. Exod. xii. 26.
These delights if thou canst give,
Mirth, with thee I mean to live. Milton.

TO MEAN. v. a.
1. To purpose; to intend; to design.
Ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good,
to save much people alive. Gen. i. 20.
And life more perfect have attain'd than fate
Meant me, by venturing higher than my lot.

I practis'd it to make you taste your cheer
With double pleasure, first prepar'd by fear:
So loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence. Dryden.

ME A

2. To intend; to hint covertly; to understand.
I more easily forfake an argument on which I could delight to dwell; I mean your judgment in your choice of friends.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Whatever was meant by them, it could not be that Cain, as elder, had a natural dominion over Abel. Locke.
MEAN'DER. n. f. [Meander is a river in Phrygia remarkable for its winding course.] Maze; labyrinth; flexuous passage; serpentine winding; winding course.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, and integrals of the body. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
'Tis well, that while mankind
Through fate's perverse meander errs,
He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares. Prior.

While ling'ring rivers in meanders glide,
They scatter verdant life on either side;
The vallies smile, and with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births confess the floods embrace. Blackmore.
Law is a bottomless pit: John Bull was flattered by the lawyers, that his suit would not last above a year; yet ten long years did Hocus steer his cause through all the meanders of the law, and all the courts. Arbutnot.

MEANDROUS. adj. [from meander.] Winding; flexuous.
MEANING. n. f. [from mean.]
1. Purpose; intention.
I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning toward
you. Shaksp. King Lear.

2. Habitual intention.
Some whole meaning hath at first been fair,
Grow knaves by use, and rebels by despair. Roscommon.
3. The sense; the thing understood.

The meaning, not the name, I call: for thou,
Not of the Muses nine. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
These lost the sense their learning to display,
And those explain'd the meaning quite away. Pope.
No word more frequently in the mouths of men than conscience; and the meaning of it is, in some measure, understood; however, it is a word extremely abused by many, who apply other meanings to it which God Almighty never intended. Swift's Miscel.

MEANLY. adv. [from mean.]
1. Moderately; not in a great degree.
Dr. Metcalfe, master of St. John's College, a man meanly learned himself, but not meanly affectioned to set forward learning in others. Acham's Schoolmaster.

In the reign of Domitian, poetry was but meanly cultivated, but painting eminently flourish'd. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. Without dignity; poorly.

It was the winter wild,
While the heav'n-born child,
All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies. Milton.
The Persian state will not endure a king
So meanly born. Denham's Sophy.

3. Without greatness of mind; ungenerously.
Would you meanly thus rely
On power, you know I must obey. Prior.

4. Without respect.
Our kindred, and our very names, seem to have something desirable in them; we cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts's Logick.

MEANNESS. n. f. [from mean.]
1. Want of excellence.
The minister's greatness or meanness of knowledge to do other things, standeth in this place as a stranger, with whom our form of common prayer hath nothing to do. Hooker.

This figure is of a later date by the meanness of the workmanship. Addison on Italy.
2. Want of dignity; low rank; poverty.
No other nymphs have title to mens hearts,
But as their meanness larger hopes imparts. Waller.

Poverty, and meanness of condition, expose the wisest to scorn, it being natural for men to place their esteem rather upon things great than good. South's Sermons.

3. Lowness of mind.
The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition.
South's Sermons.

4. Sordidness; nigardiness.
MEANLY, perf. and part. pass. of to mean.
By Silvia if thy charming self be meant;
If friendship be thy virgin vows extent:
O! let me in Aminta's praises join;
Her's my esteem shall be, my passion thine. Prior.

MEASURE. n. f. [probably a corruption of measure: as, a measure of herrings is five hundred.]
MEASLES. n. f. [Ingrubilis, Latin.] Measles are a critical eruption in a fever, well known in the common practice, and bear this name, which is a diminutive of morbus, because it hath been accounted a species of such malignant and pestilential fevers, to which comparatively this is in a much inferior degree. Quincy.

ME A

My lungs

Coin words till their decay, against those measles,
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
The very way to catch them. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were rife and mortal, as likewise the measles. Arbutnot.

2. A disease of swine.
One, when he had an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it, and proclaimed the virtues of it; nothing ever thrived on it, no owner of it ever died in his bed; the swine died of the measles, and the sheep of the rot. B. Johnson's Discovery.

3. A disease of trees.
Fruit-bearers are often infected with the measles, by being scorched with the sun. Mortimer's Husbandry.
MEASLED. adj. [from measles.] Infected with the measles.

Thou vermin wretched,
As e'er in measled pork was hatched;
Thou tail of worship, that dost grow
On rump of justice as of cow. Hudibras, p. i.

MEASLY. adj. [from measles.] Scabbed with the measles.
Last trotted forth the gentle swine,
To ease her against the stump,
And dimly was heard to whine,
All as the scrubb'd her measly rump. Swift.

MEASURABLE. adj.
1. Such as may be measured; such as may admit of computation.
God's eternal duration is permanent and indivisible, not measurable by time and motion, nor to be computed by number of successive moments. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Moderate; in small quantity.
MEASURABLENESS. n. f. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.
MEASURABLY. adv. [from measurable.] Moderately.
Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness of the heart. Ecclus. xxxi. 28.

MEASURE. n. f. [measure, French; mensura, Latin.]
1. That by which any thing is measured.
A taylor's news,

Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet, Told of many a thousand. Shaksp. King John.

A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. Holder.
All magnitudes are capable of being measured; but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measures. Holder on Time.

When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah, he presumes they knew what measure he meant: that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetic and geometry, there is no reason to doubt. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.
God's goodness is the measure of his providence. Mare.
I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or insolent. Glanville's Scep.

3. Proportion; quantity settled.
Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereto; and to propo-tion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hooker.
I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet it is certain there is such a law. Locke.

4. A stated quantity: as, a measure of wine.
Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
The table round. Shaksp. Macbeth.

5. Sufficient quantity.
I'll never pause again,
Till either death hath clos'd their eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
And ev'ry measure fail me. Shaksp. King Lear.
We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Cor. x. 13.

Ought, not surpassing human measure, say.
Our religion sets before us not the example of a stupid flock, who had, by obstinate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Tillotson's Sermons.

7. Degree.
I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old world. Abbot's Description of the World.
There is a great measure of discretion to be used in the performance of confession, so that you neither omit it when your

MEA

- own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over-scrupulously pursue it when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings. Taylor's Guide to a Penitent.
- The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and conflagration of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
8. Proportionate time; musical time.
- Amaryllis breathes thy secret pains,
And thy fond heart beats measure to thy strains. Prior.
9. Motion harmonically regulated.
- My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport. Shakeſp.
- As when the stars in their æthereal race,
At length have roll'd around the liquid space,
From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
And move in measures of their former dance. Dryden.
10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.
- Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and haſty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure, full of state and anſchentry. Shakeſp.
- Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures. Shakeſp.
11. Moderation; not excess.
- O love, be moderate, allay thy ecſtaſy;
In measure rein thy joy, ſcant this exceſs;
I feel too much thy bleſſing, make it leſs,
For fear I ſurfeit. Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.
- Hell hath enlarged herſelf, and opened her mouth without measure. Iſa. vi. 14.
12. Limit; boundary. In the ſame ſenſe is
- Τρεῖς ἱεῖρες δεκάδας τριτάδας δύο, μέτρον ἵστανται
Ἐπὶ τρεῖς βόλῃς μέλλεις αἰδέσθαι.
Ἀρσένιος τριτάτου.
- Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Pſal.
13. Any thing adjusted.
- He only lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other mens eyes and tongues. Taylor's holy living.
- Chriſt reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in diſpenſing his rewards. Smalbridge's Sermons.
14. Syllables metrically numbered; metre.
- I addreſſed them to a lady, and affected the ſoftneſs of expreſſion, and the ſmoothneſs of measure, rather than the height of thought. Dryden.
- The numbers themſelves, though of the heroick measure, ſhould be the ſmoothest imaginable. Pope.
15. Tune; proportionate notes.
- The joyous nymphs and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their muſic ſweet,
And to the measures of their melodies
Did learn to move their nimble-ſhifting feet. Spenser.
16. Mean of action; mean to an end.
- His majeſty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conſenting that truſt, and lamented his error. Clarendon.

MEL

MELANCHOLY, n. f. [from μελαγχολία and χολή.] Such medicines as are supposed particularly to purge off black choler.
MELANCHOLICK, adj. [from melancholy.] Disordered with melancholy; fanciful; hypochondriacal; gloomy.
The king found himself in the head of his army, after so many accidents and melancholick perplexities. Clarendon.
If he be mad, or angry, or melancholick, or spitefully, he will paint whatever is proportionable to any one. Dryden.
The commentators on old Ari-Stotle, 'tis urg'd, in judgment vary:
They to their own conceits have brought
The image of his general thought:
Just as the melancholick eye
Sees fleets and armies in the sky. Prior.
MELANCHOLY, n. f. [from melancholia, Fr. from μελαγχολία and χολή.]
1. A disease, supposed to proceed from a redundancy of black bile; but it is better known to arise from too heavy and too viscid blood: its cure is in evacuation, nervous medicines, and powerful stimuli. Quincy.
2. A kind of madness, in which the mind is always fixed on one object.
I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation;
nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness. Shakespeare. As you like it.
3. A gloomy, pensive, discontented temper.
He protested unto them, that he had only been to seek solitary places by an extreme melancholy that had possessed him.
Sidney, b. ii.
All these gifts come from him; and if we murmur here, we may at the next melancholy be troubled that God did not make us angels. Taylor's holy Living.
This melancholy flatters, but unmans you;
What is it else but penury of soul,
A lazy froth, a numbness of the mind? Dryden.
MELANCHOLY, adj. [from melancholique, French.]
1. Gloomy; dismal.
Think of all our miseries
But as some melancholy dream, which has awak'd us
To the renewing of our joys. Denham's Sophy.
If in the melancholy shades below,
The flames of friends and lovers cease to glow;
Yet mine shall sacred last, mine undecay'd,
Burn on through death, and animate my shade. Pope.
2. Disaffected with melancholy; fanciful; habitually dejected.
How now, sweet Frank; art thou melancholy. Shakespeare.
He observes Lamech more melancholy than usual, and imagines it to be from a suspicion he has of his wife Adah, whom he loved. Locke.
MELICERIS, n. f. [from μελικερία.]
Meliceris is a tumour inclosed in a cystis, and consisting of matter like honey: it gathers without pain, and gives way to pressure, but returns again. If the matter forming it resembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma; if like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, or a fatty substance, steatomata. Sharp's Surgery.
MELILOT, n. f. [from melilot, Fr. melilotus, Latin.] A plant.
The melilot hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empanement arises the pointal, which afterward becomes a naked capsule, that is, not hid in the empanement, as in trefoil, pregnant with one or two roundish seeds: the leaves grow by threes on the foot-stalks, and the flowers are produced in a spike. Miller.
TO MELIORATE, v. a. [from melior, Fr. from melior.] To better; to improve.
Grafting meliorates the fruit; for that the nourishment is better prepared in the stock than in the crude earth. Bacon.
But when we graft, or buds inoculate, Denham.
Nature by art we nobly meliorate.
A man ought by no means to think, that he should be able so much as to alter or meliorate the humour of an ungrateful person by any acts of kindness. Saunders's Sermons.
Castration serves to meliorate the flesh of those beasts that suffer it. Graunt.
Much labour is requir'd in trees.
Well must the ground be digg'd, and better dress'd,
New soil to make, and meliorate the rest. Dryden's Virg.
MELIORATION, n. f. [from melior, Fr. from melior.] Improvement; act of bettering.
For the melioration of musick there is yet much left, in this point of exquisite comforts, to try. Denham.
MELIORITY, n. f. [from melior.] State of being better.
Men incline unto them which are softest, and least in their way, in despite of them that hold them hardest to it; so that this colour of meliority and pre-eminence is a sign of weakness. Bacon's Collection of Good and Evil.

MEL

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernable ends of them, the meliority above what was necessary to be, do evince, by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship not of blind mechanism, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.
TO MELL, v. n. [meller, se meller, Fr.] To mix; to meddle.
Obsolete.
With fathers sits not with such things to mell. Spenser.
Here is a great deal of good matter
Lost for lack of telling.
Now I see thou dost but clutter,
Harm may come of melling. Spenser's Pastorals.
MELLI'FEROUS, adj. Productive of honey. Dict.
MELLI'FICATION, n. f. [mellifico, Latin.] The art or practice of making honey; production of honey.
In judging of the constitution of the air, many things besides the weather ought to be observed: in some countries, the silence of grasshoppers, and want of mellification in bees.
Arbutnot on Air.
MELLI'FUEUCE, n. f. [mel and fue, Latin.] A honied flow;
a flow of sweetnels.
MELLI'FUEUCE, adj. [mel and fue, Latin.] Flowing with MELLI'FUEOUS. } honey; flowing with sweetnels.
A mellifueous voice, as I am a true knight. Shakespeare.
As all those things which are most mellifueous are soonest changed into choler and bitterness, so are our vanities and pleasures converted into the bitterest sorrows and repentances.
Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Innumerable songsters, in the freshening shade
Of new-sprung leaves, their modulations mix Mellifueous. Thomson's Spring, l. 605.
MELLOW, adj. [mearpa, soft, Saxon; Stinner: more nearly from mollis, melle, mollaw, mellow; though r is indeed easily changed into l in common speech.]
1. Soft with ripeness; full ripe.
A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves. Shak.
An apple in my hand works different effects upon my senses: my eye tells me it is green; my nose, that it hath a mellow scent; and my taste, that it is sweet. Digby.
A little longer,
And nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit, without a winter storm. Dryden.
2. Soft in sound.
Of seven smooth joints a mellow pipe I have,
Which with his dying breath Dametas gave. Dryden.
3. Soft; unctuous.
Camomile sheweth mellow grounds fit for wheat. Bacon.
4. Drunk; melted down with drink.
Greedy of physicians frequent fees,
From female mellow praise he takes degrees. Recommon.
In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a testy, touchy, pleasant fellow;
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Addison.
TO MELLOW, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To ripen; to mature; to be ripened; to ripen by age.
Lord Aubrey Vere
Was done to death, and more than so, my father;
Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years. Shakespeare.
The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the feat of majesty. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
On foreign mountains may the sun refine
The grape's soft juice, and mellow it to wine. Addison.
2. To soften.
They plow in the wheat stubble in December; and if the weather prove frosty to mellow it, they do not plow it again till April. Mortimer's Husband.
3. To mature to perfection.
This episode is not only now the most pleasing entertainment of the Aeneis, but was so accounted in his own age, and before it was mellowed into that reputation which time has given it. Dryden.
TO MELLOW, v. n. To be matured; to ripen.
Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou
In my grave's inside see'lt, what thou art now;
Yet thou'rt not yet so good, till us death lay
To ripe and mellow there, we're stubborn clay. Donne.
MELLOWNESS, n. f. [from mellow.]
1. Maturity of fruits; ripeness; softness by maturity.
My reason can consider greenness, mellowness, sweetness, or coldness, singly, and without relation to any other quality that is painted in me by the same apple. Digby of Bodies.
The Spring, like youth, fresh blossoms doth produce,
But Autumn makes them ripe, and fit for use:
So age a mature mellowness doth set
On the green promises of youthful heat. Denham.
2. Maturity; full age.
MELOCOTON, n. f. [melocotone, Spanish; malum cotoneum, Latin.] A quince. Obsolete.
In apricots, peaches, or melocotones upon a wall, the greatest fruits are towards the bottom. Bach.

MELO'DIOUS, adj. [from melody.] Musical; harmonious.
Fountains! and ye that warble, as ye flow, Milton.
Melodious murmurs! warbling tune his praise.
And oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;
A musick more melodious than the spheres. Dryden.
MELO'DIOUSLY, adv. [from melodious.] Musically; harmoniously.
MELO'DIOUSNESS, n. f. [from melodious.] Harmoniousness;
musicalness.
MELODY, n. f. [μελωδία.] Musick; harmony of sound.
The prophet David having singular knowledge not in poetry alone but in musick also, judged them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him for that purpose a number of divinely indited poems, and was farther the author of adding unto poetry melody in publick prayer, melody both vocal and instrumental, for the raising up of mens hearts, and the sweetening of their affections towards
God. Hooker, b. v.
Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord. Eph. v. 19.
Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
And hudst with buzzing night flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfume'd chambers of the great, Shakespeare.
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody.
Lend me your songs, ye nightingales: Oh pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse. Thomson's Spring, l. 570.
MELON, n. f. [melon, Fr. melo, Latin.]
1. A plant.
The flower of the melon consists of one leaf, which is of the expanded bell shape, cut into several segments, and exactly like those of the cucumber: some of these flowers are barren, not adhering to the embryo; others are fruitful, growing upon the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, for the most part of an oval shape, smooth or wrinkled, and divided into three seminal apartments, which seem to be cut into two parts, and contain many oblong seeds. Miller.
2. The fruit.
We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely;
the cucumbers and the melons. Num. xi. 5.
MELON-THISTLE, n. f. [melocotus, Latin.]
The whole plant of the melon-thistle hath a singular appearance, is very succulent, and hath many angles, which are beset with sharp thorns. Miller.
TO MELT, v. a. [mylean, Saxon.]
1. To dissolve; to make liquid; commonly by heat.
How they would melt me out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me! Shakespeare.
When the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil. Isa. xiv. 2.
This price, which is given above the value of the silver in our coin, is given only to preserve our coin from being melted down. Locke.
Will a goldsmith give one ounce and a quarter of coined silver for one ounce of bullion, when, by putting it into his melting pot, he can make it bullion? Locke.
The rock's high summit in the temple's shade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade. Pope.
If your butter when melted tastes of brags, it is your master's fault, who will not allow you a silver saucepan. Swift.
2. To dissolve; to break in pieces.
To take in pieces this frame of nature, and melt it down into its first principles; and then to observe how the divine wisdom wrought all these things into that beautiful composition; is a kind of joy, which pierceth the mind. Burnet.
3. To soften to love or tenderness.
The mighty master smil'd to see That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kindred sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love. Dryd. Alexander's Feast.
Alas! thy story melts away my soul. Addison's Cato.
4. To waste away.
Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In general riot, melted down thy youth
In different beds of lust. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
TO MELT, v. n.
1. To become liquid; to dissolve; to be made fluid.
Let them melt away as waters which run continually. Psalm.
The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
While lilies hang their heads and soon decay,
And whiter snow in minutes melts away. Dryden.
2. To be softened to pity, or any gentle passion; to grow tender, mild, or gentle.
I melt, and am not
Of stronger earth than others. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Dighton and Forrest;
Albeit, they were flesh villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children in their death's sad story. Shakespeare.
This said; the mov'd assistants melt in tears. Dryden.
Melting

MEM

- Melting* into tears, the pious man
Deplor'd to find a fight.
3. To be dissolved; to lose substance.
Whether are they vanish'd?
Into the air: and what seem'd corporal
Melted as breath into the wind. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Beauty is a witch,
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood. Shakespeare.
4. To be subdued by affliction.
My soul melteth for heaviness: strengthen thou me. Psal.
MELTER. n. f. [from melt.] One that melts metals.
Miso and Mopla, like a couple of forewat melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney, b. ii.
This the author attributes to the remissness of the former melters, in not exhausting the ore. Derham's Physico-Theol.
MELTINGLY. adv. [from melting.] Like something melting.
Zelmane lay upon a bank, with her face bent over Ladon, that her tears falling into the water, one might have thought the began meltingly to be metamorphosed to the running river. Sidney, b. ii.
MELTLE. n. f. A kind of fish.
MEMBER. n. f. [membre, French; membrum, Latin.]
1. A limb; a part appendant to the body.
The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things.
Jam. iii. 5.
2. A part of a discourse or period; a head; a clause.
Where the respondent limits or distinguishes any proposition, the opponent must prove his own proposition according to that member of the distinction in which the respondent denied it.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
3. Any part of an integral.
In poetry as in architecture, not only the whole but the principal members, and every part of them, should be great.
Addison's Spect. N. 267.
4. One of a community.
My going to demand justice upon the five members, my enemies loaded with obloquies.
Mean as I am, yet have the Muses made Me free, a member of the tuneful trade. Dryden.
Sienna is adorned with many towers of brick, which, in the time of the commonwealth, were erected to such of the members as had done any considerable service to their country.
Addison on Italy.
MEMBRANE. n. f. [membrana, Fr. membrana, Latin.]
A membrane is a web of several sorts of fibres, interwoven together for the covering and wrapping up some parts: the fibres of the membranes give them an elasticity, whereby they can contract, and closely grasp, the parts they contain, and their nervous fibres give them an exquisite sense, which is the cause of their contraction; they can, therefore, scarcely suffer the sharpness of medicines, and are difficultly united when wounded. Quincy.
The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation,
the dam doth after tear asunder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
They obstacle find none
Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars:
Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace,
Total they mix. Milton.
The inner membrane that involved the several liquors of the egg remained unbroken. Boyle.
MEMBRANACEOUS. adj. [membraneus, Fr. from membrana, MEMBRANEUS. Lat.] Consisting of membranes.
Lute-strings, which are made of the membranous parts of the guts strongly wreathed, swell so much as to break in wet weather. Boyle.
Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the filly-hov. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Such birds as are carnivorous have no gizzard, or muscular, but a membranous stomach; that kind of food being torn into small flakes by the beak, may be easily concocted by a membranous stomach. Roy on Creation.
Anodyne substances, which take off contractions of the membranous parts, are diuretick. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Birds of prey have membranaceous, not muscular stomachs.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
MEMENTO. n. f. [Latin.] A memorial notice; a hint to awaken the memory.
Our gracious master, for his learning and piety, is not only a precedent to his own subjects, but to foreign princes; yet he is still but a man, and seasonable memento's may be useful. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Is not the frequent spectacle of other peoples deaths a memento sufficient to make you think of your own? L'Estrange.
MEMOIR. n. f. [memoire, French.]
1. An account of transactions familiarly written.
Be our great master's future charge
To write his own memoirs, and leave his heirs
High schemes of government and plans of wars. Prior.
2. Hint; notice; account of any thing.

MEM

- There is not in any author a computation of the revenues of the Roman empire, and hardly any memoirs from whence it might be collected. Arbutnot on Coins.
MEMORABLE. adj. [memorable, Fr. memorabilis, Lat.] Worthy of memory; not to be forgotten.
Nothing I so much delight to recount, as the memorable friendship that grew betwixt the two princes. Sidney.
From this desire, that main desire proceeds,
Which all men have furviving fame to gain,
By tombs, by books, by memorable deeds,
For the that this desires doth still remain.
Dares Ulysses for the prize contend,
In fight of what he durst not once defend;
But basely fled that memorable day,
When I from Hector's hands redeem'd the flaming prey.
Dryden's Ovid.
MEMORABLY. adv. [from memorable.] In a manner worthy of memory.
MEMORANDUM. n. f. [Latin.] A note to help the memory.
I resolved to new pave every street within the liberties, and entered a memorandum in my pocket-book accordingly.
Guardian, N^o. 166.
Nature's fair table-book, our tender souls,
We scrawl all o'er with old and empty rules,
Stale memorandums of the schools. Swift's Miscel.
MEMORIAL. adj. [memorial, Fr. memorialis, Latin.]
1. Prefervative of memory.
Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,
And gives memorial dainty kisses to it. Shakespeare.
May I, at the conclusion of a work, which is a kind of monument of Pope's partiality to me, place the following lines as an inscription memorial of it. Brome.
The tomb with many arms and trophies raise;
There high in air memorial of my name
Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.
2. Contained in memory.
The case is the same with the memorial possessions of the greatest part of mankind: a few useful things mixed with many trifles fill up their memories. Watts.
MEMORIAL. n. f.
1. A monument; something to preserve memory.
All churches have had their names; some as memorials of peace, some of wisdom, some in memory of the trinity itself, some of Christ underundry titles; of the blessed Virgin not a few; many of one apostle, faint, or martyr; many of all.
Hooker.
A memorial unto Israel, that no stranger offer incense before the Lord. Nam. xvi. 43.
All the laws of this kingdom have some monuments or memorials thereof in writing, yet all of them have not their original in writing; for some of those laws have obtained their force by immemorial usage. Hale.
In other parts like deeds deserv'd
Memorial, where the might of Gabriel fought. Milton.
Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitting conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. Saunders's Sermon.
Medals are so many monuments consigned over to eternity, that may last when all other memorials of the same age are worn out or lost. Addison on ancient Medals.
2. Hint to assist the memory.
He was a prince sad, serious, and full of thoughts and secret observations, and full of notes and memorials of his own hand touching persons. Bacon's Henry VII.
Memorials written with king Edward's hand shall be the ground of this history. Heyward.
MEMORIALIST. n. f. [from memorial.] One who writes memorials.
I must not omit a memorial setting forth, that the mem-orialist had, with great dispatch, carried a letter from a certain lord to a certain lord. Spectator, N^o. 629.
MEMORIZE. v. a. [from memory.] To record; to commit to memory by writing.
They neglect to memorize their conquest of the Indians, especially in those times in which the fame was supposed.
Sponser on Ireland.
Let their names that were bravely lost be rather memorized in the full table of time: for my part, I love no ambitious pains in an eloquent description of miseries. Watson.
MEMORY. n. f. [memoire, Fr. memoria, Latin.]
1. The power of retaining or recollecting things past; retention; reminiscence; recollection.
Memory is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas which after imprinting have disappeared, or have been laid aside out of sight. Locke.
The memory is perpetually looking back, when we have nothing present to entertain us: it is like those repositories in animals that are filled with stores of food, on which they may ruminate, when their present pasture fails. Addison's Spectator.
2. Exemption

MEN

2. Exemption from oblivion.
That ever-living man of memory, Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Henry the Fifth!
3. Time of knowledge.
Thy request think now fulfill'd, that ask'd
How first this world, and face of things, began,
And what, before thy memory, was done. Milton.
4. Memorial; monumental record.
Be better suited;
These weeds are memories of those worse hours:
I prythee put them off. Shakespeare's King Lear.
A swan in memory of Cygnus shines;
The mourning filters weep in wat'ry signs. Addison.
5. Reflection; attention. Not in use.
When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and waffle to convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
MEN, the plural of man.
Wits live obscurely men know not how; or die obscurely men mark not when. Ascham.
For men, there are to be considered the valour and number: the old observation is not untrue, that the Spaniards valour lieth in the eye of the looker-on; but the English valour lieth about the soldiers heart. Bacon's War with Spain.
He thought fit that the king's affairs should entirely be conducted by the soldiers and men of war. Clarendon, b. viii.
MEN-PLASER. n. f. [men and plaser.] One too careful to please others.
Servants be obedient to them that are your masters: not with eye-service, as men-plasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. Eph. vi. 6.
To MENACE. v. a. [menace, Fr.] To threaten; to threat.
Who ever knew the heavens menace to?
Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale?
Who sent you hither? Shakespeare's Richard III.
My master knows not but I am gone hence,
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents. Shakespeare.
From this league
Peep'd harms that menace'd him. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
What should he do? 'Twas death to go away,
And the god menace'd if he dar'd to stay. Dryden's Fables.
MENACE. n. f. [menace, Fr. from the verb.] Threat.
He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether, before an ocular example, he believed the curse at last. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
The Trojans view the dusky cloud from far,
And the dark menace of the distant war. Dryden's Eneis.
MENACER. n. f. [menaceur, Fr. from menace.] A threatener;
one that threatens.
Hence menace! nor tempt me into rage:
This roof protects thy rashness, But begone! Philips.
MENAGE. n. f. [French.] A collection of animals.
I saw here the largest menage that I met with any-where.
Addison on Italy.
MENAGOGUE. n. f. [menages and zygo.] A medicine that promotes the flux of the menses.
To MEND. v. a. [emenda, Latin.]
1. To repair from breach or decay.
They gave the money to the workmen to repair and mend
the house. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 10.
2. To correct; to alter for the better.
The best service they could do to the state, was to mend
the lives and manners of the persons who compos'd it.
Temple's Miscel.
You need not despair, by the assistance of his growing reason, to master his timorousness, and mend the weakness of his constitution. Locke on Education.
Though in some lands the grass is but short, yet it mends garden herbs and fruit. Mortimer's Haybandry.
Their opinion of Wood, and his project, is not mended.
Swift.
3. To help; to advance.
Whatever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends some, and impairs others: and he that is helped takes it for a fortune, and he that is hurt for a wrong. Bacon.
If, to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum stans of the schools, they will thereby very little mend the matter, or help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.
4. To improve; to increase.
Death comes not at all; justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'r, or cries. Milton.
When upon the sands the traveller,
Sees the high sea come rolling from afar,
The land grow short, he mends his weary pace,
While death behind him covers all the place.
He saw the monster mend his pace; he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings. Dryden.
To MEND. v. z. To grow better; to advance in any good;
to be changed for the better.

MEN

- Name a new play and he's the poet's friend;
Nay, show'd his faults—but when wou'd poets mend?
Pope's Essay on Criticism.
MENDABLE. adj. [from mend.] Capable of being mended. A low word.
MENDACITY. n. f. [from mendax, Latin.] Falsehood.
In this delivery there were additional mendacities; for the commandment forbid not to touch the fruit, and positively said, Ye shall surely die; but she, extenuating, replied, Left ye die. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
MENDER. n. f. [from mend.] One who makes any change for the better.
What trade art thou? A trade that I may use with a safe conscience; a mender of bad foils. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
MENDICANT. adj. [mendicans, Latin.] Begging; poor to a state of beggary.
Be not righteous over-much, is applicable to those who,
out of an excess of zeal, practise mortifications, whereby they macerate their bodies; or to those who voluntarily reduce themselves to a poor, and perhaps mendicant, state.
Fiddes's Sermons.
MENDICANT. n. f. [mendicant, Fr.] A beggar; one of some begging fraternity in the Romish church.
To MENDICATE. v. a. [mendico, Lat. mendier, Fr.] To beg;
to ask alms.
MENDICITY. n. f. [mendicitas, Lat. mendicite, Fr.] The life of a beggar.
MENDS for amends.
Let her be as she is: If she be fair, 'tis the better for her;
and if she be not, she has the mends in her own hands. Shak.
MENIAL. adj. [from many or many; meni, Saxon, or mesnie, old French.]
1. Belonging to the retinue, or train of servants.
Two menial dogs before their master pres'd;
Thus clad, and guarded thus, he seeks his kingly guest.
Dryden's Eneis.
2. Swift seems not to have known the meaning of this word.
The women attendants perform only the most menial offices. Gulliver's Travels.
MENIAL. n. f. One of the train of servants.
MENINGES. n. f. [meninges, Fr.] The meninges are the two membranes that envelope the brain, which are called the pia mater and dura mater; the latter being the exterior involucre, is, from its thickness, so denominated. Diet.
The brain being exposed to the air groweth fluid, and is thrust forth by the contraction of the meninges. Wijeman.
MENOLOG. n. f. [μενολόγιον; menologe, French.] A register of months.
In the Roman martyrology we find, at one time, many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian: the menology saith they were twenty thousand. Stillingfleet.
MENOW. n. f. commonly minnow. A fish. Avif.
MENSA. adj. [mensalis, Lat.] Belonging to the table; transacted at table. A word yet scarcely naturalized.

MENSTRUAL. adj. [menstrual, Fr. menstruus, Latin.]
1. Monthly; happening once a month; lasting a month.
She turns all her globe to the sun, by moving in her menstrual orb, and enjoys night and day alternately, one day of her's being equal to about fourteen days and nights of ours.
Bentley's Sermons.
2. Pertaining to a menstruum. [menstruus, Fr.]
The distills of the menstrual or strong waters hinder the incorporation, as well as those of the metal. Bacon.
MENSTRUOUS. adj. [menstruus, Lat.] Having the catamenia.
O thou of late belov'd,
Now like a menstrual woman art remov'd. Sandys's Par.
Many, from being women, have proved men at the first point of their menstrual eruptions. Brown.
MENSTRUUM. n. f. [This name probably was derived from some notion of the old chemists about the influence of the moon in the preparation of dissolvents.]
All liquors are called menstrua which are used as dissolvents, or to extract the virtues of ingredients by infusion, de-coction. Quincy.
Inquire what is the proper menstruum to dissolve metal, what will touch upon the one and not upon the other, and what several menstrua will dissolve any metal. Bacon's Physical Rem.
White metalline bodies must be excepted, which, by reason of their excessive density, seem to reflect almost all the light incident on their first superficies, unless by solution in menstrua they be reduced into very small particles, and then they become transparent. Newton's Opticks.
MENSTRUABILITY. n. f. [menstruabilitas, French.] Capacity of being measured.
MENSTRABLE. adj. [mensura, Latin.] Measurable; that may be measured.
We measure our time by law and not by nature. The solar month is no periodical motion, and not easily mensurable, and the months unequal among themselves, and not to be measured by even weeks or days. Holder.

MER

ME'SURAL. adj. [from mensura, Latin.] Relating to measure.

TO ME'SURATE. v. a. [from mensura, Latin.] To measure; to take the dimension of any thing.

MENSURATION. n. f. [from mensura, Lat.] The act or practice of measuring; result of measuring.

After giving the mensuration and argumentation of Dr. Cumberland, it would not have been fair to have suppressed those of another prelate.

ME'NTAL. adj. [mentale, French; mentis, Lat.] Intellectual; existing in the mind.

What a mental power

This eye shoots forth? How big imagination

Moves in this lip? To the dumbness of the gesture

One might interpret. Shakep. Timon of Athens.

So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd,

Ev'n to the inmost seat of mental light,

That Adam now enforc'd to close his eyes,

Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Millon.

The metaphor of taste would not have been so general, had there not been a very great conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste that affects the palate.

Addison's Spect. No. 409.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; for where the ideas are not, there can be no knowledge, no assent, no mental or verbal propositions about them.

She kindly talk'd, at least three hours,

Of plack'd forms, and mental pow'rs. Prior.

Those inward representations of spirit, thought, love, and hatred, are pure and mental ideas, belonging especially to the mind, and carry nothing of shape or sense in them.

Watts's Logic.

ME'NTALLY. adv. [from mental.] Intellectually; in the mind; not practically, but in thought or meditation.

If we consider the heart the first principle of life, and mentally divide it into its constituent parts, we find nothing but what is in any muscle of the body.

ME'NTION. n. f. [mentions, Fr. mention, Latin.] Oral or written expression, or recital of any thing.

Think on me when it shall be well with thee; and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house.

Gen. xl. 14.

The Almighty introduces the proposal of his laws rather with the mention of some particular acts of kindness, than by reminding mankind of his severity.

TO ME'NTION. v. a. [mentioner, Fr. from the noun.] To write or express in words or writing.

I will mention the loving-kindnesses of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord.

These mentioned by their names were princes in their families.

What is he?

— A mercantant, or else a pedant.

I know not what but formal in apparel.

ME'RCANTILE. adj. Trading; commercial.

The expedition of the Argonauts was partly mercantile, partly military.

Let him travel and fulfil the duties of the military or mercantile life; let prosperous or adverse fortune call him to the most distant parts of the globe, still let him carry on his knowledge, and the improvement of his soul.

ME'RCAT. n. f. [mercatus, Latin.] Market; trade.

With irresistible majesty and authority our Saviour removed the exchange, and drove the mercat out of the temple.

ME'RCATURE. n. f. [mercatura, Latin.] The practice of buying and selling.

ME'RCENARINESS. n. f. [from mercenary.] Venality; respect to hire or reward.

To forego the pleasures of sense, and undergo the hardships that attend a holy life, is such a kind of mercenariness, as none but a resigned, believing soul is likely to be guilty of; if fear itself, and even the fear of hell, may be one justifiable motive of mens actions.

MERCENARY. adj. [mercenaire, Fr. mercenarius, Lat.] Venal; hired; sold for money; acting only for hire.

Many of our princes, woe the while! Lie drown'd, and foked in mercenary blood.

Divers Almain, who served in the garisons, being merely mercenary, did easily incline to the strongest.

The appellation of servant imports a mercenary temper, and denotes such an one as makes his reward both the sole motive and measure of his obedience.

I was not for nothing I the crown resign'd;

I still must own a mercenary mind.

MERCENARY. n. f. [mercenaire, Fr.] A hireling; one retained or serving for pay.

He a poor mercenary serves for bread;

For all his travel, only cloth'd and fed.

MERCER. n. f. [mercier, French.] One who sells silks.

The draper and mercer may measure religion as they please, and the weaver may cast her upon what loom he pleases.

ME'RCERY. n. f. [mercerie, Fr. from mercier.] Trade of mercers; dealing in silks.

The mercery is gone from out of Lombard-street and Cheapside into Paternoster-row and Fleet-street.

MERCIFULNESS. n. f. [from merciful.] Tenderness; willingness to spare.

The band that ought to knit all these excellencies together is a kind of mercifulness to such a one, as is in his soul devoted to such perfections.

Use the means ordinary and lawful, among which mercifulness and liberality is one, to which the promise of secular wealth is most frequently made.

MERCELESS. adj. [from mercy.] Void of mercy; pitiless; hard hearted; cruel; severe.

His mother merciless, Most merciless of women Wyden high,

Her other son fast sleeping did oppress, And with most cruel hand him murdered pitiless.

The foe is merciless, and will not pity.

MER

MER

Think not their rage so desperate t' essay

An element more merciless than they.

What God so mean,

So merciless a tyrant to obey!

Whatever ravages a merciless distemper may commit, she shall have one man as much her admirer as ever.

The torrent merciless imbibes

Commissions, perquisites, and bribes.

MERCILESSLY. adv. [from merciless.] In a manner void of pity.

MERCILESSNESS. n. f. [from merciless.] Want of pity.

MERCURIAL. adj. [mercurialis, Lat.]

1. Formed under the influence of mercury; active; sprightly.

I know the shape of 's leg: This is his hand,

His foot mercurial, his martial thigh,

The brawns of Hercules.

This youth was such a mercurial, as could make his own part, if at any time he chanced to be out.

Tully considered the dispositions of a sincere, more ignorant, and less mercurial nation, by dwelling on the pathetic part.

2. Consisting of quicksilver.

MERCURIFICATION. adj. [from mercury.] The act of mixing any thing with quicksilver.

I add the ways of mercurification.

MERCURY. n. f. [mercurius, Latin.]

1. The chemist's name for quicksilver is mercury.

The gall of animals and mercury kill worms; and the water in which mercury is boiled has this effect.

2. Sprightly qualities.

Thus the mercury of man is fix'd,

Strong grows the virtue with his nature mix'd;

The dross cements what else were too refin'd,

And in one inext body acts with mind.

3. A news-paper.

4. It is now applied, in cant phrase, to the carriers of news and pamphlets.

MERCURY. n. f. [mercurialis, Latin.] A plant.

The leaves of the mercury are crenated, and grow by pairs opposite: the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, which expands and is cut into three segments; these are male and female in different places: the flowers of the male grow in long spikes, and consist of many stamina and apices, which are loaded with farina: the ovary of the female plant becomes a testiculated fruit, having a single round seed in each cell.

Herb mercury is of an emollient nature, and is eaten in the manner of spinach, which, when cultivated in a garden, it greatly exceeds.

MERCY. n. f. [merci, French, contracted from misericordia, Latin.]

1. Tenderness; goodness; pity; willingness to save; clemency; mildness; unwillingness to punish.

Oh heav'n have mercy on me!

— I say, amen.

And have you mercy too?

Mercy is not strain'd;

It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heav'n, Upon the place beneath. It is twice bless'd;

It blest him that gives and him that takes.

Arise, and have mercy upon Zion.

Thou, O God, art gracious, long-suffering, and in mercy ordering all.

Examples of justice must be made for terror to some; examples of mercy for comfort to others: the one procures fear, and the other love.

Good heav'n, whose darling attribute we find Is boundless grace, and mercy to mankind, Abhors the cruel.

We adore his undeserved mercy towards us, that he made us the chief of the visible creation.

2. Pardon.

As offer'd mercy is.

That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here.

I cry thee mercy with all my heart, for suspecting a friar of the least good-nature.

wards, seemed to form a throne for the majesty of God, who in scripture is represented as sitting between the cherubims, and the ark was his footstool: it was from hence that God gave his oracles to Moses, or to the high-priest that consulted him.

Make a mercy-seat of pure gold.

MERE. adj. [merus, Latin.] That or this only; such and no other thing else; this only.

This avarice

Strikes deeper, grows with more pernicious root Than Summer-teeming lust; and it hath been

The sword of our slain kings: yet do not fear, Scotland hath foilons to fill up your will

Of your mere own.

I have engag'd myself to a dear friend, Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,

To feed my means.

The mere Irish were not admitted to the benefit of the laws of England, until they had purchased charters of denization.

From mere success nothing can be concluded in favour of any nation upon whom it is bestowed.

What if the head, the eye, or ear repin'd, To serve mere engines to the ruling mind.

Let Eastern tyrants from the light of heav'n Seclude their bosom slaves, meanly possess'd

Of a mere, lifeless, violated form.

MERE or mere, whether in the beginning, middle, or end, always signify the same with the Saxon mere, a pool or lake.

MERE. n. f. [mepe, Saxon.]

1. A pool; commonly a large pool or lake: as, Winander mere.

I may say nothing of meres stored both with fish and fowl.

2. A boundary.

The millayer of a mere-stone is to blame: but it is the unjust judge that is the capital remover of land-marks, who despoils amils of lands.

MERELY. adv. [from mere.] Simply; only; thus and no other way; for this and for no other end or purpose.

Which thing we ourselves would grant, if the use thereof had been merely and only mystical.

These external manners of laments Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,

That swells with silence in the tortur'd soul.

It is below reasonable creatures to be conversant in such diversions as are merely innocent, and have nothing else to recommend them.

Above a thousand bought his almanack merely to find what he said against me.

Prize not your life for other ends Than merely to oblige your friends.

MERETRICIOUS. adj. [meretricius, meretrix, Latin.] Whorish; such as is practised by prostitutes; alluring by false show.

Our degenerate understandings having suffered a sad divorce from their dearest object, defile themselves with every meretricious semblance, that the variety of opinion pretends them with.

Not by affected, meretricious arts, But strict harmonious symmetry of parts.

MERETRICIOUSLY. adv. [from meretricious.] Whorishly; after the manner of whores.

MERETRICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from meretricious.] False allure-ment like those of strumpets.

1. Noon; mid-day.

He promis'd in his East a glorious race, Now sunk from his meridian, sets apace.

2. The line drawn from North to South, which the Sun crosses at noon.

The true meridian is a circle passing through the poles of the world, and the zenith or vertex of any place, exactly dividing the East from the West.

The Sun or Moon, rising or setting, our idea represents bigger than when on the meridian.

3. The particular place or state of any thing.

All other knowledge merely serves the concerns of this life, and is fitted to the meridian thereof: they are such as will be of little use to a separate soul.

4. The highest point of glory or power.

I've touch'd the highest point of all my greatness, And from that full meridian of my glory I haste now to my setting.

Your full majesty at once breaks forth In the meridian of your reign.

MERIDIAN. adj.

1. At the point of noon.

Sometimes towards Eden, which now in his view Lay pleasant, his griev'd look he fixes sad;

Sometimes

MER

- Sometimes tow'rd heav'n, and the full blazing Sun,
Which now sat high in his meridian tow'r. Milton.
2. Extended from North to South.
Compare the meridian line afforded by magnetical needles with one mathematically drawn, and observe the variation of the needle, or its declination from the true meridian line. Boyle.
3. Raised to the highest point.
- MERIDIONAL. adj. [meridional, French.]
1. Southern.
In the southern coast of America or Africa, the southern point varieth toward the land, as being disposed that way by the meridian or proper hemisphere. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. Southerly; having a southern aspect.
All offices that require heat, as kitchens, stillatories, and stoves, would be meridianal. Wotton's Architect.
- MERIDIONALITY. n. f. [from meridianal.] Position in the South; aspect towards the South. Ans.
- MERIDIONALLY. adv. [from meridianal.] With a southern aspect.
The Jews, not willing to lie as their temple stood, do place their bed from North to South, and delight to sleep meridionally. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
- MERIT. n. f. [meritum, Latin; meritis, French.]
1. Desert; excellence deserving honour or reward.
You have the captives; use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakspeare, King Lear.
She deem'd I well deserv'd to die,
And made a merit of her cruelty. Dryden.
Rofcommon, not more learn'd than good,
With manners gen'rous as his noble blood;
To him the wit of Greece and Rome was known,
And ev'ry author's merit but his own. Pope.
She valu'd nothing leis
Than titles, figure, shape, and drefs;
That merit should be chiefly plac'd
In judgment, knowledge, wit, and taste. Swift.
2. Reward deserved.
Those laurel groves, the merits of thy youth,
Which thou from Mahomet didst greatly gain,
While bold assertor of refistless truth,
Thy sword did godlike liberty maintain. Prior.
3. Claim; right.
As I am studious to promote the honour of my native country, I put Chaucer's merits to the trial, by turning some of the Canterbury tales into our language. Dryden.
When a point hath been well examined, and our own judgment settled, after a large survey of the merits of the cause, it would be a weakness to continue fluttering. Watts.
- TO MERIT. v. a. [meritis, French.]
1. To deserve; to have a right to claim any thing as deserved.
Amplify have merited of me, of all
Th' infernal empire. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
A man at best is incapable of meriting any thing from God. South's Sermons.
2. To deserve; to earn: it is used generally of good, but sometimes of ill.
Whatsoever jewels I have merited, I am sure I have received none, unless experience be a jewel; that I have purchased at an infinite rate. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
If such rewards to vanquish'd men are due,
What prize may Nilus from your bounty claim,
Who merited the first rewards, and fame? Dryden.
- MERITORIOUS. adj. [meritoire, Fr. from merit.] Deserving of reward; high in desert.
Instead of so great and meritorious a service, in bringing all the Irish to acknowledge the king for their liege, they did great hurt. Spenser on Ireland.
The war that hath such a foundation will not only be reputed just, but holy and meritorious. Raleigh's Essays.
A most sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory and meritorious death and obedience of the incarnate Son of God, Jesus Christ, God blessed for ever.
Bishop Sanderson.
This is not only the most prudent, but the most meritorious charity, which we can practice. Addison's Spect.
- MERITORIOUSLY. adv. [from meritorious.] In such a manner as to deserve reward.
He carried himself meritoriously in foreign employments in time of the interdict, which held up his credit among the patriots. Wotton.
- MERITORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from meritorious.] The act or state of deserving well.
There was a full persuasion of the high meritoriousness of what they did; but still there was no law of God to ground it upon, and consequently it was not confidence. South.
- MERITOR. n. f. [escillum, Lat.] A kind of play. Ans.
- MERLIN. n. f. A kind of hawk.
Not yielding over to old age his country delights; he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney.

MER

- ME'RMALD. n. f. [mer, the sea, and maid.] A sea woman; an animal with a woman's head and fish's tail.
I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall. Shakspeare.
Thou remembrest,
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song.
Did sense persuade Ulysses not to hear
The mermaid's songs, which so his men did please,
That they were all persuaded, through the ear,
To quit the ship and leap into the seas?
Few eyes have escaped the picture of a mermaid: Horace his monster, with woman's head above and fishy extremity below, answers the shape of the ancient syrens that attempted upon Ulysses. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
- MERMAID'S TRUMPET. n. f. A kind of fish. Ans.

laughter.
Merrily, merrily, shall we live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough. Shakspeare.
When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merrily. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.
You have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
A paisan of France thinks of no more than his coarse bread and his onions, his canvas clothes and wooden shoes, labours contentedly on working days, and dances or plays merrily on holidays. Temple's Misc.
- Merrily sing, and sport, and play,
For 'tis Oriana's nuptial day. Granville.
- ME'RRIMAKE. n. f. [merry and make.] A festival; a meeting for mirth.
Thenot now nis the time of merrymake,
Nor Pan to herie, nor with love to play,
Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or Summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser's Puff.
The knight did not forbear,
Her honest mirth and pleasure to partake,
But when he saw her gibe, and toy, and geare,
And pass the bounds of modest merrymake,
Her dalliance he despised. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
- TO ME'RRIMAKE. v. a. To feast; to be jovial.
With thee 'twas Marian's dear delight
To moid all day, and merrymake at night. Gay's Pastoral.
- MERRIMENT. n. f. [from merry.] Mirth; gaiety; cheerfulness; laughter.
Who when they heard that piteous strained voice,
In haste forsook their rural merriment. Fairy Queen, b. i.
A number of merriments and jests, wherewith they have pleasantly moved much laughter at our manner of serving God. Hooker, b. v.
- Merriment it was the found
Of riot and ill-managed merriment. Milton.

They drank and were merry with him. Gen. xliii. 34.
By the vine languisheth, all the merry-hearted sigh. Ips. xxiv.
Some that are of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company into which they come to be sad and ill-disposed;
and others that are of a jovial nature, do dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Man is the merriest species of the creation; all above and below him are serious. Addison.
2. Causing laughter.
You kill'd her husband, and for that vile fault
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death;
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest. Shakspeare.
3. Prosperous.
In my small pinnacle I can sail,
Contemning all the blustering roar;
And running with a merry gale,
With friendly flars my safety seek,
Within some little winding creek,
And see the storm ashore. Dryden.
- TO MAKE MERRY. To junket; to be jovial.
They trod the grapes and made merry, and went into the house of their God. Judg. ix. 27.
A fox 'py'd a bevy of jolly, gossiping wenches making merry over a dish of pullets. Strange.
- MERRY-ANDREW. n. f. A buffoon; a zany; a jack-pudding.
He would be a statesman because he is a buffoon; but there went no more to the making of a counsellor than the faculties of a merry-andrew or tumbler. Lehmann.
- The first who made the experiment was a merry-andrew. Spectator, No. 599.
- MERRY-THOUGHT.

MES

- ME'RYTHOUGHT. n. f. [merry and thought.] A forked bone on the body of fowls; so called because boys and girls pull in play at the two sides, the longest part broken off betoken-ing priority of marriage.

my cousin. Eachard's Contempt of the Clergy.
- MESSE'ACK. n. f. [μεσσην; messeigne, Fr.] analogy requires it messeigne. Belonging to the mystery.
It taketh leave of the permanent parts at the mouths of the messeigne, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion into the siege. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- The most subtle part of the chyle passeth immediately into the blood by the absorbent vessels of the guts, which discharge themselves into the messeigne veins. Arbutnot.
- MESSE'IGN. n. f. [messeigne, Lat.] The act of sinking, or thrusting over head. Ans.
- MESSE'IMS, impersonal verb. [me and seems, or it seems to me:]
for this word it is now too common to use methinks or methought, an ungrammatical word; I think; it appears to me;
methinks.
Alas, of ghosts I hear the gaffly cries;
Yet there, messeims, I hear her singing loud. Sidney.
Messeimed by my fide a royal maid,
Her dainty limbs full softly down did lay. Fairy Queen.
To that general subjection of the land messeims that the custom or tenure can be no bar nor impeachment. Spenser.
- MESSE'NTERY. n. f. [μεσσην; messeigne, Fr.] That round which the guts are convolved.
When the chyle passeth through the messeintery, it is mixed with the lymph. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- MESSE'NTERICK. adj. [messeintérique, French, from messeintery.]
Relating to the messeintery.
They are carried into the glands of the messeintery, receiving a fine lymph from the lymphatic ducts, which dilates this chylous fluid, and scours its containing vessels, which, from the messeintery glands, unite in large channels, and pass directly into the common receptacle of the chyle. Chyne.
- MESH. n. f. [mesche, Dutch; mache, old French:] it were therefore better written, as it is commonly pronounced, mesh.
The interstice of a net; the space between the threads of a net.
The drovers hang square nets athwart the tide, thorough which the shoal of pilchard passing, leave many behind entangled in the meshes. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Such a hate is madness the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the criples. Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.
He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glances to betray
The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden.
With all their mouths the nerves the spirits drink,
Which through the cells of the fine strainers sink:
These all the channel'd fibres ev'ry way,
For motion and sensation, still convey:
The greatest portion of th' arterial blood,
By the close structure of the parts withstood,
Whole narrow meshes stop the grosser food. Blackmore.
- TO MESH. v. a. [from the noun.] To catch in a net; to ensnare.
The flies by chance mesh in her hair,
From her bright radiance thrown
From her clear eyes, rich jewels were,
They so like diamonds shone. Drayton.
Some build his house, but thence his issue barre,
Some make his meshy bed, but leave his rest. Carew.
Caught in the meshy snare, in vain they beat Their idle wings. Thomson.
- ME'SLIN. n. f. [from meslin, French, to mix; or rather corruptly pronounced for mescellane. See MASLIN.] Mixed corn:
as, wheat and rye.
What reason is there which should but induce, and therefore much less enforce, us to think, that care of old diffimi-litude between the people of God and the heathen nations about them, was any more the cause of forbidding them to put on garments of sundry stuff, than of charging them withal not to sow their fields with meslin. Hooker, b. iv.
If work for the thresher ye mind for to have,
Of wheat and of meslin unthresh'd go save. Tusser.
- MESOLUTYCS. n. f. [μεσολυτικα.] A precious stone, black, with a streak of white in the middle. Dia.

The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words so wise do make their way,
To bear the message of her spright. Spenser, Sonnet 81.
May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears! Shakspeare.
She is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues; sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages. Shakspeare.
Gently hast thou told
Thy message, which might else in telling wound,
And in performing end us. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
Let the minister be low, his interest inconsiderable, the word will suffer for his sake; the message will still find reception according to the dignity of the messenger. South.
- The welcome message made, was soon receiv'd;
'Twas to be with'd and hop'd, but scarce believ'd. Dryden.
- ME'SSENGER. n. f. [messager, French.] One who carries an errand; one who comes from another to a third; one who brings an account or foretoken of any thing; an harbinger;
a forerunner.
Came running in, much like a man difmaid,
A messenger with letters, which his message said. Fa. Qu.
Yon grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shakspeare.
Run after that same peevish messenger,
The duke's man. Shakspeare.
The earl dispatched messengers one after another to the king, with an account of what he heard and believed he saw, and yet thought not fit to stay for an answer. Clarendon.
Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd. Pope.
- MESSIAH. n. f. [from the Hebrew.] The Anointed; the Christ; the Saviour of the world; the Prince of peace.

be met with in other countries, take it for granted they can never be in the wrong so long as they can oppose ministers of state. Addison's Freeholder, No. 48.
- METAGRAMMATISM. n. f. [μεταγραμματισμος.]
Anagrammatism, or metagrammatism, is a dissolution of a name truly written into its letters, as its elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial transposition, without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named.
Camden's Remains.
- METABASIS. n. f. [Greek.] In rhetoric, a figure by which the orator passes from one thing to another. Dieter.
- METABOLA. n. f. [μεταβολα.] In medicine, a change of time, air, or disease.

the carpus to the metacarpus, Wifeman's Surgery.
- METACARPAL. adj. [from metacarpus.] Belonging to the me-tacarpus. Dieter.
- It will facilitate the separation in the joint, when you cut the finger from the metacarpal bone. Sharp's Surgery.
- ME'TAL. n. f. [metal, French; metallum, Latin.]
We understand by the term metal a firm, heavy, and hard substance, opaque, fusible by fire, and concreting again when 16 K cold

MET

cold into a solid body such as it was before, which is malleable under the hammer, and is of a bright, glossy, and glittering substance where newly cut or broken. The metals are fix in number: 1. gold; 2. silver; 3. copper; 4. tin; 5. iron; and, 6. lead; of which gold is the heaviest, lead the second in weight, then silver, then copper, and iron is the lightest except tin: some have added mercury or quicksilver to the number of metals; but as it wants malleability, the criterion of metals, it is more properly ranked among the semi metals.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out. Moxon.
2. Courage; spirit. In this sense it is more frequently written mettle. See METTLE.

Being glad to find their companions had so much metal, after a long debate the major part carried it. Clarendon.
3. Upon this signification the following ambiguity is founded.

Both kinds of metal he prepar'd,
Either to give blows or to ward;
Courage and steel both of great force,
Prepar'd for better or for worse. Hadibras, p. i.
METALEPSIS. n. f. [μετάληψις.] A continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of significations. Bailey.
METALLICAL. adj. [from metallum, Lat. metallique, French.]
METALLICK. adj. Partaking of metal; containing metal; consisting of metal.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallal nature, or fusibility, seem to have resolved it to nobler use; an art now utterly lost. Watton's Architecture.

The lofty lines abound with endless store
Of mineral treasure, and metallick ore. Blackmore.
METALLIFEROUS. adj. [metallum and fero, Latin.] Producing metals. Dict.

METALLINE. adj. [from metal.]
1. Impregnated with metal.

Metalline waters have virtual cold in them; put therefore wood or clay into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N^o. 84.

2. Consisting of metal.

Though the quicksilver were brought to a very close and lovely metalline cylinder, not interrupted by interperfed bubbles, yet having caused the air to be again drawn out of the receiver, several little bubbles disclosed themselves. Boyle.

METALLIST. n. f. [from metal; metalliste, Fr.] A worker in metals; or skilled in metals.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out; it is made of quick lime and ox blood. Moxon's Mech. Exercitios.

TO METAMORPHOSE. v. a. [metamorphose, Fr. μεταμορφώω.] To change the form or shape of any thing.

Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me;
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time. Shakespeare.

They became degenerate and metamorphos'd like Nebuchadnezzar, who, though he had the face of a man, had the heart of a beast. Davies on Ireland.

The impossibility to conceive so great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphos'd into travellers, with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Watton's Buckingham.

From such rude principles our form began;
And earth was metamorphos'd into man. Dryden's Ovid.

METAMORPHOSIS. n. f. [metamorphose, Fr. μεταμορφώσις.] 1. Transformation; change of shape.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the cause of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Obscene talk is grown so common, that one would think we were fallen into an age of metamorphosis, and that the brutes did not only poetically but really speak. Gov. Tongue.

The fifteenth book is the master-piece of the whole metamorphoses. Dryden.

What! my noble colonel in metamorphosis! On what occasion are you transformed? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

There are probable machines in epick poems, where the gods are no less actors than the men; but the less credible sort, such as metamorphoses, are far more rare. Pope's Odyssey.

2. It is applied, by Harvey, to the changes an animal undergoes, both in its formation and growth; and by several of the various shapes some insects in particular pass through, as the silk-worm, and the like. Quincy.

METAPHOR. n. f. [metaphora, Fr. μέταφορα.] The application of a word to an use to which, in its original import, it cannot be put: as, he brides his anger; he deadens the found; the spring awakes the flowers. A metaphor is a simile comprized in a word; the spring putting in action the powers of vegetation, which were torpid in the winter, as the powers of a sleeping animal are excited by awaking him.

MET

The work of tragedy is on the passions, and in a dialogue; both of them abhor strong metaphors, in which the epocæa delights.

Dryden's Ded. to Virgil's Æneis.
METAPHORICAL. adj. [metaphorique, Fr. from metaphor.] METAPHORICK. adj. Not literal; not according to the primitive meaning of the word; figurative.

The words which were do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use. Hooker.

METAPHRA'SE. n. f. [μετάφρασις.] A mere verbal translation from one language into another.

This translation is not so loose as paraphrase, nor so close as metaphor.

METAPHRA'ST. n. f. [metaphragste, Fr. μετάφραστής.] A literal translator; one who translates word for word from one language into another.

METAPHYSICAL. adj.

1. Veried in metaphysics; relating to metaphysics.

2. In Shakespeare it means supernatural or preternatural.

He thee higher,
To chaffice with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate, and metaphysical aid, doth seem
To have crown'd thee withal. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

METAPHYSICK. n. f. [metaphysique, Fr. μέταφυσική.] On-METAPHYSICKS. s. tology; the doctrine of the general affections of substances existing.

The mathematics and the metaphysics,
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you. Shakspeare.

Call her the metaphysics of her sex,
And say the tortures wits, as quartans vex Physicians. Cleland.

If fight be caused by intromission, or receiving in, the form of contrary species should be received confusedly together, which how absurd it is, Aristotle shews in his metaphysics. Peacham on Drawing.

See physick beg the Stagyrite's defence!
See metaphysick call for aid on sense! Pope's Dunciad.

The topics of ontology or metaphysick, are cause, effect, action, passion, identity, opposition, subject, adjunct, and sign. Watts's Logick.

METATARSAL. adj. [from metatarsus.] Belonging to the metatarsus.

The bones of the toes, and part only of the metatarsal bones, may be carious; in which case cut off only so much of the foot as is disordered. Sharp's Surgery.

METATARSUS. n. f. [μέτα and ταρσός.] The middle of the foot, which is composed of five small bones connected to those of the first part of the foot. Dict.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining the tarsus to the metatarsus. Wiseman's Surgery.

METATHESIS. n. f. [μετάθεσις.] A transposition.

TO METE. v. a. [metor, Latin.] To measure; to reduce to measure.

I will divide Shechem, and mete the valley of Succoth. Psal.
To measure any distance by a line, apply some known measure wherewith to mete it. Holder.

Though you many ways pursue
To find their length, you'll never mete the true,
But thus; take all that space the sun
Mets out, when every daily round is run. Creech.

METEWAND. n. f. [mete and wand.] A staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.

METRYARD. s. tain length wherewith measures are taken. A true touchstone, a sure meteward lieth before their eyes. Asham's Schoolmaster.

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in meteward, weight, or measure. Lev. xix. 35.

TO METEMPSYCHO'SE. v. a. [from metempsychosis.] To translate from body to body. A word not received.

The souls of usurers after their death, Lucian affirms to be metempsychos'd, or translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain years, for poor men to take their pennyworth out of their bones. Peacham on Blazoning.

METEMPSYCHOSIS. n. f. [μετεμψύχωσις.] The transmigration of souls from body to body.

From the opinion of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death Orpheus the musician became a swan. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

METEOR. n. f. [meteora, Fr. μέτεωρα.] Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux and transitory nature. Look'd

MET

Look'd he or red, or pale, or sad, or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in this case? Shakespeare.

Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face?
She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star had life upon the horizon of Ireland; for there had the like meteor strong influence before. Bacon's Henry VII.

These burning fits but meteors be,
Whole matter in thee soon is spent:
Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee, Donne.

Are an unchangeable firmament.
Then flaming meteor, hung in air, were seen,
And thunders rattled through a sky serene. Dryden's Æn.

Why was I rais'd the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travell'd,
Till all my fires were spent; and then cast downward
To be trod out by Cæsar? Dryden's All for Love.

O poet, thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
Which did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

METEOROLOGICAL. adj. [from meteorology.] Relating to the doctrine of meteors.

Many others are considerable in meteorological divinity.
Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be new-come guests, or old inhabitants in heaven, or meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Howel's Vocal Forest.

METEOROLOGIST. n. f. [from meteorology.] A man skilled in meteors, or studious of them.

The meteorologist observe, that amongst the four elements which are the ingredients of all sublunary creatures, there is a notable correspondency. Howel's Vocal Forest.

METEORLOGY. n. f. [μετεωρολογία and λόγος.] The doctrine of meteors.

In animals we deny not a natural meteorology, or innate presentation of wind and weather. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

METEOROUS. adj. [from meteor.] Having the nature of a meteor.

From the o'er hill
To their fixt station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground.
Gliding meteorous, as ev'ning milt,
Ris'n from a river. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

METER. n. f. [from mete.] A measurer: as, a coal-meter, a land-meter.

METHEGLIN. n. f. [meddyglyn, Welsh, from medd and glyn, glutinare ait Minshew, vel a meddyg medicus & llyn potus quia potus medicinalis.] Drink made of honey boiled with water and fermented.

White handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
—Honey, and milk, and sugar, there is three.
—Nay then two treys; and if you grow so nice,
Methinks, wort, and malmsey. Shakespeare.

To allay the strength and hardness of the wine,
And with old Bacchus new metheglin join. Dryden.

METHINKS, verb impersonal. [me and thinks.] This is imagined to be a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I. I think; it seems to me; methinks. See MESSEMS, which is more strictly grammatical, though less in use. Methinks was used even by those who used likewise messems.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and, methinks, not without great cause; for, besides their sweet inventions, and most witty lays, they have always used to set forth the praises of the good and virtuous. Spenser on Ireland.

If he choose out some expression which does not vitiate the sense, I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts, methinks, he breaks it. Dryd.

There is another circumstance, which, methinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams, that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her. Addison's Spect. N^o. 487.

Methinks already I your tears survey. Pope.

METHOD. n. f. [methode, Fr. μέθοδος.] Method, taken in the largest sense, implies the placing of several things, or performing several operations in such an order as is most convenient to attain some end. Watts.

To see wherein the harm which they feel consisteth, the seeds from which it sprang, and the method of curing it, belongeth to a skill the study whereof is full of toil, and the practice beset with difficulties. Hooker, b. v.

If you will jest with me know my aspect,
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your conscience. Shakespeare.

It will be in vain to talk to you concerning the method I think best to be observed in schools. Locke on Education.

Notwithstanding a faculty be born with us, there are several methods for cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain. Addison's Spect. N^o. 409.

METHODICAL. adj. [methodique, Fr. from method.] Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

MET

The observations follow one another without that methodical regularity requisite in a prose author. Addison's Spect.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them where he pleases; to us, perhaps, not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion; but, with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers.

Let me appear, great Sir, I pray, Methodical in what I say. Addison's Resamon.

METHODICALLY. adv. [from methodical.] According to method and order.

All the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and clearly delivered in this treatise. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To begin methodically, I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object. Suckling.

TO METHODISE. v. a. [from method.] To regulate; to dispose in order.

Refolv'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
The royal spy retir'd unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen,
And methodize revenge. Dryden's Boccace.

The man who does not know how to methodize his thoughts, has always a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves. Spenser's N^o. 476.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodized and explained, in the works of a good critic. Addison's Spect. N^o. 291.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are nature still, but nature methodis'd. Pope.

METHONIST. n. f. [from method.]
1. A physician who practises by theory.

Our warriest physicians, not only chemists but methodists, give it inwardly in several constitutions and distempers. Boyle.

2. One of a new kind of puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules and in constant method.

METHOUGHT, the preterite of methinks. See METHINKS and MESSEMS. I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has methought, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from methinks.

Methought, a serpent eat my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey. Shakespeare.

Since I fought
By pray'r th' offended deity t' appease;
Kneel'd, and before him humbly'd all my heart.
Methought, I saw him placable, and mild,
Bending his ear: persuasion in me grew
That I was heard with favour; peace return'd Home to my breast; and to my memory
His promise, "That thy feed shall bruise our foe." Milton.

In these
I found not what, methought, I wanted still. Milton.
Methought I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'erpass, but knew not how. Dryden.

METONYMICAL. adj. [from metonymy.] Put by metonymy for something else.

METONYMICALLY. adv. [from metonymical.] By metonymy; not literally.

The disposition of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by the name of a colour metonymically, or efficiently; that is, in regard of its turning the light that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour. Boyle on Colours.

METONYMY. n. f. [metonymie, Fr. μετωνυμία.] A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the materiate; he died by steel, that is, by a sword.

They differ only as cause and effect, which by a metonymy usual in all sorts of authors, are frequently put one for another. Tillotson.

METOPOSCOPY. n. f. [metoposcopia, Fr. μέτροπος and σκοπέω.] The study of physiognomy; the art of knowing the characters of men by the countenance.

METRE. n. f. [metrum, Latin; μέτρον.] Speech confined to a certain number and harmonick disposition of syllables; verse; measure; numbers.

For the metre sake, some words be driven awry which require a straighter placing in plain prose. Asham's Schoolmaster.

He taught his Romans in much better metre,
To laugh at fools. Pope.

METRICAL. adj. [metricus, Latin; metrique, Fr.] Pertaining to metre or numbers.

METROPOLIS. n. f. [metropolis, Latin; metropole, French; πόλις and πόλις.] The mother city; the chief city of any country or district.

His eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen: or some renown'd metropolis,
With glittering spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton.

Round their metropolis.
We stopped at Pavia, that was once the metropolis of a kingdom, but at present a poor town. Addison on Italy.

METROPOLITAN.

MEW

METROPOLITAN. n. f. [metropolitanus, Latin.] A bishop of the mother church; an archbishop.
He was promoted to Canterbury upon the death of Dr. Bancroft, that metropolitan, who understood the church excellently, and countenanced men of the greatest parts in learning. Clarendon.
METROPOLITAN. adj. Belonging to a metropolis.
Their patriarch, of a covetous desire to enrich himself, had forborn to institute metropolitan bishops. Raleigh.
METROPOLITICAL. adj. [from metropolis.] Chief or principal of cities.
He fearing the power of the Christians was gone as far as Gratia, the metropolitical city of Stiria. Knolles.
METTLE. n. f. [corrupted from metal, but commonly written so when the metaphorical sense is used.]
1. Spirit; spiriteliness; courage.
What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?
He was quick mettle when he went to school. Shakespeare.
I had rather go with fir priest than fir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the feditious. Hayward's Edw. VI.
He had given so frequent testimony of signal courage in several actions, that his mettle was never suspected. Clarendon.
'Tis more to guide than spur the mule's steed,
Refrain his fury, than provoke his speed;
The winged courier, like a generous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course. Pope.
2. Substance: this at least should be metal.
Oh thou! whole self-fame mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puffed,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue. Shakespeare.
METTLED. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritely; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.
Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never. Benj. Johnson.
Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled floods, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison.
METTLESOME. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritely; lively; gay; brisk; airy; fiery; courageous.
Their force differs from true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse. Tatler, N^o. 61.
METTLESOMELY. adv. [from mettlesome.] With spiriteliness.
MEW. n. f. [mue, French.]
1. A cage; an inclosure; a place where any thing is confined.
Forth-coming from her darksome mew,
Where the all day did hide her hated hew. Fairy Queen.
There then she does transform to monstrous hues,
And horribly mis-shapes with ugly fights,
Captiv'd eternally in iron mews,
And darksome dens, where Titan his face never shows. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Her lofty hand would of itself refuse
To touch the dainty needle or nice thread;
She hated chambers, closets, secret mews,
And in broad fields preserv'd her maidenhead. Fairfax.
2. [Map, Saxon.] A sea-fowl.
Among the first fort we reckon coots, fanderlings, and meaves. Carew.
The vessel sticks, and shews her open'd side,
And on her shatter'd mast the mews in triumph ride. Dryden.
TO MEW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shut up; to confine; to imprison; to inclose.
He in dark corners mew'd,
Mutter'd of matters as their books them shew'd. Hubbard.
Unto the bush her eye did sudden glance,
In which vain Braggadocio was mew'd,
And saw it stir. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Why should your fears, which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up Your tender kinsman. Shakespeare. King John.
Fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun;
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon. Shakespeare.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakespeare.
Feign them sick,
Close mew'd in their sedans, for fear of air. Dryden's Juv.
It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life mew him up in a closet, and never let him go into company. Locke.
2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers.
I should discourse of hawks, and then treat of their ayries, mewings, culling, and renovation of their feathers. Walton.

MIC

The sun hath mew'd his beams from off his lamp,
And majesty defac'd the royal stamp. Cleaveland.
Nine times the moon had mew'd her horns, at length
With travel weary, unsuppl'd with strength,
And with the burden of her womb oppress'd,
Sabeen fields afford her needful rest. Dryden.
3. [Miauler, French.] To cry as a cat.
Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, the dog will have his day. Shakespeare.
They are not improveable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark. Grew's Cat.

In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities. Shakespeare.
All this tract that fronts the falling sun,
A noble peer, of mickle trust and power,
Has in his charge. Milton.
MICROCOSM. n. f. [micro and cosmos.] The little world.
Man is so called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him something analogous to the four elements.
You see this in the map of my microcosm. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
She to whom this world must itself refer,
As suburbs, or the microcosm of her;
She, she is dead; she's dead, when thou know'st this,
Thou know'st how lame a creature this world is. Donne.
As in this our microcosm, the heart
Heat, spirit, motions gives to every part:
So Rome's victorious influence did disperse
All her own virtues through the universe. Denham.
Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and the body natural may be compared to the body politic. Swift.
MICROGRAPHY. n. f. [micro and graphein.] The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernable only with a microscope. The

MID

The honey-bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter: a curious description and figure of the sting see in Mr. Hook's micrography. Grew's Museum.
MICROSCOPE. n. f. [micro and scopos; microscope, Fr.] An optick instrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwise be seen.
If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscopes, and to discern the smallest hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curse, and not a blessing, to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed; the most finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the sight of our own selves would affright us; the smoothest skin would be beset all over with ragged scales and bristly hairs. Bentley.
The critick eye, that microscope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit. Dunciad, b. iv.
MICROMETER. n. f. [micro and metron; micrometre, French.] An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.
MICROSCOPICAL. n. f. [from microscope.]

2. Affixed by a microscope.
Evading even the microscopick eye!
Full nature swarms with life. Thomson's Summer.
3. Resembling a microscope.
Why has not man a microscopick eye?
For this plain reason, Man is not a fly.
Say what the use, were finer opticks given,
T'inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.
MID. adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dutch.]
1. Middle; equally between two extremes.
No more the mounting larks, while Daphne sings, Shall, sitting in mid air, suspend their wings. Pope.

Unweary'd, through th'num'rous host he past. Rowe.
2. It is much used in composition.
MID-COURSE. n. f. [mid and course.] Middle of the way.
Why in the East
Darkness ere day's mid-course? and morning light,
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws
O'er the blue firmament a radiant white. Milton.
MID-DAY. n. f. [mid and day.] Noon; meridian.
Who shoots at the mid-day sun, though he be sure he shall never hit the mark, yet as sure he is he shall shoot higher than he who aims but at a bush. Sidney, b. ii.
His sparkling eyes, replete with awful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces. Shakespeare.
Who have before, or shall write after thee,
Their works, though toughly labour'd, will be Like infancy or age to man's firm stay,
Or early or late twilights to mid-day. Donne.
Did he not lead you through the mid-day sun,
And clouds of dust? Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?
Yet the stout fairy 'mongst the middest crowd, Thought all their glory vain in knightly view. Fa. Qu.
MIDDELE. adj. [miesle, Saxon.]
1. Equally distant from the two extremes.
The lowest virtues draw praise from the common people; the middle virtues work in them astonishment; but of the highest virtues they have no sense. Bacon's Essays.
A middle station of life, within reach of those conveniences which the lower orders of mankind must necessarily want, and yet without embarrassment of greatness. Rogers.
To deliver all his fleet to the Romans, except ten middle-sized brigantines. Arbutnot on Coins.
I like people of middle understanding and middle rank. Sto.
2. Intermediate; intervening.
Will, seeking good, finds many middle ends. Davies.

MIDDLE. n. f.
1. Part equally distant from two extremities; the part remote from the verge.
There come people down by the middle of the land. Judge.
With roof so low that under it
They never stand, but lie or sit;
And yet so foul, that who is in,
Is to the middle leg in prison. Hudibras, p. i.
2. The time that passes, or events that happen, between the beginning and end.
The causes and designs of an action are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties are the end. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

MID

MIDDLE-AGED. adj. [middle and age.] Placed about the middle of life.
A middle-aged man, that was half grey, half brown, took a fancy to marry two wives. L'Estrange's Fables.
The middle-aged support fasting the best, because of the oily parts abounding in the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.
I found you a very young man, and left you a middle-aged one: you knew me a middle-aged man, and now I am an old one. Swift to Pope.
MIDDLEMOST. adj. [from middle.] Being in the middle.
Why have not some beasts more than four feet, suppose six, and the middlemost shorter than the rest. More.
The outmost fringe vanished first, and the middlemost next, and the innermost last. Newton's Opticks.
The outward stars, with their systems of planets, must necessarily have descended toward the middlemost system of the universe, whither all would be most strongly attracted from all parts of a finite space. Bentley's Sermons.
MIDDLE. adj. [from middle.]
1. Of middle rank.
A middle sort of a man, left well enough to pass by his father, could never think he had enough so long as any man had more. L'Estrange's Fables.
2. Of moderate size; having moderate qualities of any kind.
The bigness of a church ought to be no greater than that unto which the voice of a preacher of middle lungs will easily extend. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
Longinus preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs, to the middle or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to any excellence. Dryden.
Middling his head, and prone to earth his view. Tickell.
MIDLAND. adj. [mid and land.]
1. That which is remote from the coast.
The same name is given to the inlanders, or midland inhabitants of this island, by Cæsar. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The midland towns abounding in wealth, shews that her riches are intern and domestick. Howel's Vocal Forest.
The various dialects of the English in the North and West, render their expressions many times unintelligible to the other, and both scarce intelligible to the midland. Hale.

There was the Plymouth Squadron now come in,
Which twice on Biscay's working bay had been,
And on the midland sea the French had aw'd. Dryden.
MIDGE. n. f. [mæge, Saxon.] A gnat.
MID-HEAVEN. n. f. [mid and heaven.] The middle of the sky.
But the hot hell that always in him burns,
Though in mid-heaven, soon ended his delight. Milton.
MIDLEG. n. f. [mid and leg.] Middle of the leg.
He had fifty attendants, young men all, in white fatten, loose coats to the midleg, and stockings of white silk. Bacon.
MIDMOST. adj. [from mid, or contracted from middlemost: this is one of the words which have not a comparative, though they seem to have a superlative degree.] The middle.
Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hasting up behind. Dryden.
Hear himself repine
At fate's unequal laws; and at the clue,
Which, mercilefs in length, the midmost sifter drew. Dry.
What dulness dropt among her sons imprest,
Like motion, from one circle to the rest:
So from the midmost the nutation spreads
Round, and more round o'er all the sea of heads. Pope.
MIDNIGHT. n. f. [mid and night.] Milton seems to have accented this last syllable. The noon of night; the depth of night; twelve at night.
To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
How now, you secret, black and midnight hags?
What is't you do? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I hope my midnight studies, to make our countries flourish in mysterious and beneficent arts, have not ungratefully affected your intellects. Bacon.
By night he fled, and at midnight returned From compassing the earth; cautious of day. Milton.
After this time came on the midnight of the church, wherein the very names of the councils were forgotten, and men did only dream of what had past. Stillingfleet.
Some solitary cloister will I chuse,
Coarse my attire, and short shall be my sleep,
Broke by the melancholy midnight bell. Dryden's Sp. Fryar.
In all that dark midnight of popery there were still some gleams of light, some witnesses that arose to give testimony to the truth. Atterbury.
They can tell precisely what altitude the dog-star had at midnight or midnoon in Rome when Julius Cæsar was slain. Watts's Logick.
MIDRIFT. n. f. [mædriffe, Saxon.] The diaphragm.
The midriff divides the trunk of the body into two cavities, the thorax and abdomen: it is composed of two muscles; the

the first and superior of these arises from the sternum, and the ends of the last ribs on each side: its fibres, from this semicircular origination, tend towards their centre, and terminate in a tendon or aponeurosis, which hath always been taken for the nervous part of the midriff. The second and inferior muscle comes from the vertebrae of the loins by two productions, of which that on the right side comes from the first, second, and third vertebrae of the loins; that on the left side is somewhat shorter; and both these productions join and make the lower part of the midriff, which joins its tendons with the tendon of the other, so as that they make but one membrane, or rather partition. Quincy.

Whereat he only rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone
That beat out life. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
In the gullet, where it perforateth the midriff, the carious fibres of that muscular part are infected. Ray.

MID-SEA. n. f. [mid and sea.] The Mediterranean sea.

Our Tyrrhene Pharos, that the mid-sea meets
With its embrace, and leaves the land behind. Dryden.

MIDSHIPMAN. n. f. [from mid, ship, and man.]
Midshipmen are officers aboard a ship, whose station, when they are on duty, is some on the quarter-deck, others on the poop, &c. Their business is to mind the braces, to look out, and to give about the word of command from the captain and other superior officers: they also assist on all occasions, both in sailing the ship, and in storing and rummaging the hold. They are usually young gentlemen, who having served their time as volunteers, are now upon their preferment. Harris.

MIDST. n. f. Middle.
All is well when nothing pleases but God, being thankful in the midst of his afflictions. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Ariste, ye subtle spirits, that can spy
When love is enter'd in a female's eye;
You that can read it in the midst of doubt,
And in the midst of frowns can find it out. Dryden.

MIDST. adj. [contracted from midst, the superlative of mid.]
Midmost; being in the middle.

On earth join all ye creatures to extol
Him first, Him last, Him midst, and without end. Milton.
In the Slighted Maid, there is nothing in the first act but what might have been said or done in the fifth; nor any thing in the midst which might not have been placed in the beginning. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

MIDSTREAM. n. f. [mid and stream.] Middle of the stream.
The midstream's his; I creeping by the side,
And shoulder'd off by his impetuous tide. Dryden.

At eve last Midsummer no sleep I fought. Gay's Past.

MIDWAY. n. f. [mid and way.] The part of the way equally distant from the beginning and end.

No midway 'twixt these extremes at all. Shakespeare.
He were an excellent man that were made in the midway between him and Benedick; the one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore tattling. Shakespeare. Much ado about nothing.

Pity and shame! that they, who to live well
Stood so fair, should turn aside to tread Paths indirect, or in the midway faint! Milton's Par. Lost.
The hare laid himself down about midway, and took a nap; for I can fetch up the tortoise when I please. L'Estrange's Fables.

How didst thou arrive at this place of darkness, when so many rivers of the ocean lie in the midway. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

MIDWAY. adj. Middle between two places.

How fearful
And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low!
The crows and choughs that wing the midway air,
Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shakespeare.

Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
Not knowing which was mild or stale. Prior.

MILDERNAX. n. f. Cannabum nauticum.

MILDEW. n. f. [milcheape, Saxon.]

Mildew is a disease that happens in plants, and is caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and continuing, for want of the sun's heat, to draw it up, by its acrimony corrodes, gnaws, and spoils, the inmost substance of the plant, and hinders the circulation of the nutritive sap; upon which the leaves begin to fade, and the blossoms and fruit are much prejudiced: or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, which is frequently found in great plenty, preying upon this exudation. Others say, that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the Spring and Summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun enough to draw it upwards to any considerable height, nor wind of force strong enough to disperse it: it condenses and falls on plants, and with its thick, clammy substance stops the pores, and by that means prevents perspiration. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the East, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration; whereby the juices of the plants are concreted upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are inticed thereto, where finding proper nutriment they deposit their eggs, and multiply so fast as to cover the whole surfaces of the plants, and, by corroding the vessels, prevent the motion of the sap. It is observable, that whenever a tree has been greatly affected by this mildew, it seldom recovers it in two or three years, and many times never is intirely clear from it after. Hill.

Down fell the mildew of his faged words. Fairfax.

The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or champaign grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.

Soon blasting mildews black'ned all the grain. Dryden.

MIL

To MILDEW. v. a. To taint with mildew.

Here is your husband, like a mildew'd ear, Blasting his wholesome brother. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

He mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creatures of the earth. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Morals snatch from Plutarch's tatter'd page,
A mildew'd Bacon, or Stagyras's sage. Gay's Trivia.

MILDNESS. n. f. [from mild.]

1. Gentleness; tenderness; mercy; clemency.

This milky gentleness and course of yours;
You are much more at talk for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful mildness. Shakespeare. King Lear.

The same majestic mildness held its place;
Nor lost the monarch in his dying face. Dryden.

His probity and mildness shows
His care of friends and scorn of foes. Addison.

I saw with what a brow you brav'd your fate;
Yet with what mildness bore your father's hate. Dryden.

2. Contrariety to acrimony.

Against foul fiends they aid us militant;
They for us fight; they watch and duly ward,
And their bright squadrons round about us plant. Fa. Q.

2. Engaged in warfare with hell and the world. A term applied to the church of Christ on earth, as opposed to the church triumphant.

Then are the publick duties of religion best ordered, when the militant church doth resemble, by sensible means, that hidden dignity and glory wherewith the church triumphant in heaven is beautified. Hooker, b. v.

The state of a Christian in this world is frequently compared to a warfare: and this allusion has appeared so just, that the character of militant has obtained as the common distinction of that part of Christ's church sojourning here in this world from that part of the family at rest. Rogers.

MILITAR. } adj. [militaris, Latin; militaire, Fr. Militar

MILITARY. } is now wholly out of use.]

This milky gentleness and course of yours,
You are much more at task for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful midnefs. Shakespeare, King Lear.
MILKY-WAY. n. f. [milky and way.] The galaxy.
The milky-way, or via lactea, is a broad white path or track, encompassing the whole heavens, and extending itself in some places with a double path, but for the most part with a single one. Some of the ancients, as Aristotle, imagined that this path consisted only of a certain exhalation hanging in the air; but, by the telescopic observations of this age, it hath been discovered to consist of an innumerable quantity of fixed stars, different in situation and magnitude, from the confused mixture of whose light its whole colour is supposed to be occasioned. It passes through the constellations of Cassiopeia, Cygnus, Aquila, Perseus, Andromeda, part of Ophiucus and Gemini, in the northern hemisphere; and in the southern it takes in part of Scorpio, Sagittarius, Centaurus, the Argo Navis and the Ara. The galaxy hath usually been the region in which new stars have appeared; as that in Cassiopeia, which was seen in A. D. 1572; that in the breast of the Swan, and another in the knee of Serpentarius; which have appeared for a while, and then become invisible again. Harris.
Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant skies to find the milky-way:
It forcibly intrudes upon our sight. Crech's Manilius.
How many stars there must be, a naked eye may give us some faint glimpse, but much more a good telescope, directed towards that region of the sky called the milky-way. Cheyne.

TO MINCE. v. a. [contracted, as it seems, from minish, or from mince; mince, French, small.]
1. To cut into very small parts.
She saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport,
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs. Shakespeare.
With a good chopping-knife mince the two capons as small as ordinary minced meat. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
What means the service of the church so imperfectly, and by halves, read over? What makes them mince and mangle that in their practice, which they could swallow whole in their subscriptions? South's Sermons.
Revive the wits;
But murder first, and mince them all to bits. Dunciad.
2. To mention any thing scrupulously, by a little at a time; to palliate; to extenuate.
I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say I love you. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Think it a bastard, whom the oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounced thy throat shall cut,
And mince it. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
Behold yon simpering dame, whose face between her forks prefages snow; that minces virtue, and does shake the head to hear of pleasure's name. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Iago,
Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Cassio. Shakespeare's Othello.
These gifts,
Saving your mincing, the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
I'll try to force you to your duty:
For so it is, howe'er you mince it,
Ere we part, I shall evince it. Hudibras, p. ii.
Shen; now mince the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase.
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
If, to mince his meanings, I had either omitted some part of what he said, or taken from the strength of his expression,
I certainly had wronged him. Dryden.
These, seeing no where water enough to effect a general deluge, were forced to mince the matter, and make only a partial one of it, restraining it to Asia. Woodward.

TO MINCE. v. n.
1. To walk nicely by short steps; to act with appearance of scrupulousness and delicacy; to affect nicety.
By her side did sit the bold Saniloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy. Fairy Queen.
I'll turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
A harlot form soft sliding by,
With mincing step, small voice, and languid eye. Dunciad.
2. To speak small and imperfectly.
The reeve, miller, and cook, are as much distinguished from each other, as the mincing lady prioress and the broad-speaking wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables.

MINCINGLY. adv. [from mince.] In small parts; not fully.
Justice requireth nothing mincingly, but all with pressed, and heaped, and even over-enlarged measure. Hooker, b. i.

MIND. n. f. [gemine, Saxon.]
1. The intelligent power.
I am a very foolish, fond old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakespeare. King Lear.
This word being often used for the soul giving life, is attributed abusively to madmen, when we say that they are of a distracted mind, instead of a broken understanding: which word, mind, we use also for opinion; as, I am of this or that mind: and sometimes for mens conditions or virtues; as, he is of an honest mind, or a man of a just mind: sometimes for affection; as, I do this for my mind's sake: sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we have without discourse: oftentimes for spirits, angels, and intelligences:
but as it is used in the proper signification, including both the understanding agent and passible, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to his first object: or more at large thus; a part or particle of the soul, whereby it doth understand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion coming from without, and apt to be delivered as eternal from that which is mortal. Raleigh.

MIN

2. Liking; choice; inclination; propension; affection.
Our question is, whether all be fin which is done without direction by scripture, and not whether the Israelites did at any time amiss, by following their own minds without al-king counsel of God. Hooker, b. ii.
We will consider of your suit.
And come some other time to know our mind. Shakespeare.
Being so hard to me that brought your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind. Shakespeare.
I will have nothing else but only this;
And now methinks I have a mind to it. Shakespeare.
Be of the same mind one towards another. Rom. xii. 16.
Hast thou a wife after thy mind? forsake her not. Ecclus.
They had a mind to French Britain; but they have let fall their bit. Bacon's War with Spain.
Sudden mind arose
In Adam, not to let th' occasion pass,
Given him by this great conference, to know
Of things above this world. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
Waller coasted on the other side of the river, but at such a distance that he had no mind to be engaged. Clarendon.
He had a great mind to do it. Clarendon.
All the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of fins may be had upon such cheap terms. Tillotson's Sermons.
Suppose that after eight years peace he hath a mind to infringe any of his treaties, or invade a neighbouring state, what opposition can we make? Addison.

3. Thoughts; sentiments.
Th' ambiguous god,
In these mysterious words, his mind exprest,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. Dryden.

4. Opinion.
The earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose as fearing you, it shook. Shakespeare.
These men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite space, because God has existed from all eternity; but there is no real matter coextended with infinite space.
The gods permitting traitors to succeed,
Become not parties in an impious deed;
And, by the tyrant's murder, we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind. Graville.

5. Memory; remembrance.
The king knows their disposition; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
When he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will therein set
His triple-coloured bow, whereon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
These, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.
The cavern's mouth alone was hard to find,
Because the path diffus'd was out of mind. Dryden.
They will put him in mind of his own waking thoughts, ere these dreams had as yet made their impressions on his fancy. Atterbury's Sermons.
A wholesome law time out of mind;
Had been confirm'd by fate's decree. Swift's Miscel.

TO MIND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To mark; to attend.
His mournful plight is swallowed up unawares, Forgetful of his own that minds another's cares. Fa. Q.
Not then mistrust, but tender love enjoins,
That I should mind thee oft; and mind thou me! Milton.
If, in the raving of a frantick mule,
And minding more his verses than his way,
Any of these should drop into a well. Reverend.
Cease to request me; let us mind our way;
Another song requires another day. Dryden.
He is daily called upon by the word, the ministers, and inward suggestions of the holy spirit, to attend to those prospects, and mind the things that belong to his peace. Rogers.

2. To put in mind; to remind.
Let me be punished, that have minded you
Of what you should forget. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
I desire to mind those persons of what Saint Austin hath said. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
This minds me of a cobbling colonel of famous memory. C. E. H. H.
I shall only mind him, that the contrary supposition, if it could be proved, is of little use. Lact.

TO MIND. v. a. To incline; to be disposed.
When one of them mindeth to go into rebellion, he will convey away all his lordships to scoundrels in trust. Spenser.

MIN

MIND'ED. adj. [from mind.] Disposed; inclined; affected.
We come to know
How you stand minded in the weighty difference Between the king and you. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
Whose fellowship therefore unmeet for thee,
Good reason was thou freely should'st dislike,
And be so minded still. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.
If men were minded to live virtuously, to believe a God would be no hindrance to any such design, but very much for its advancement. Tillotson's Sermons.
Pyrrhus is nobly minded; and I faint
Would live to thank him. Philips.

MINDFUL. adj. [mind and full.] Attentive; having memory.
I acknowledge the usefulness of your directions, and I promise you to be mindful of your admonitions. Hammond.

MINDFULLY. adv. [from mindful.] Attentively.

MINDFULNESS. n. f. [from mindful.] Attention; regard.

MINDLESS. adj. [from mind.]
1. Inattentive; regardless.
Curled Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forget now thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them. Shakespeare.
As the strong eagle in the silent wood,
Mindless of warlike rage, and hostile care,
Plays round the rocky cliff, or crystal flood. Prior.
2. Not endued with a mind; having no intellectual powers.
Pronounce thee a gross low, a mindless slave,
Or else a hovering temporizer. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
God first made angels bodiless, pure, minds;
Then other things, which mindless bodies be:
Last, he made man. Davies.

MIND-STRICKEN. adj. [mind and stricken.] Moved; affected in his mind.
He had been so mind-stricken by the beauty of virtue in that noble king, though not born his subject, he ever professed himself his servant. Sidney, b. ii.

MINE. n. f. [mines, French; myyn or mun, Welsh, from maen lapis, in the plural meini.]
1. A place or cavern in the earth which contains metals or minerals.
Though freighter bounds your fortune did confine,
In your large heart was found a wealthy mine. Waller.
A workman, to avoid idleness, worked in a groove or minepit thereabouts, which was little esteemed. Boyle.
A mine-digger may meet with a gem, which he knows not what to make of. Boyle.
The heedless mine-man aims only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible. Boyle.
2. A cavern dug under any fortification that it may sink for want of support, or, in modern war, that powder may be lodged in it, which being fired at a proper time, whatever is over it may be blown up and destroyed.
By what eclipse shall that sun be defac'd?
What mine hath erst thrown down so fair a tower?
Build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down, and fill up the mines that you have digg'd. Whitgift.
Others to a city strong
Lay siege, encamp'd; by batt'ry, scale and mine, Assaulting. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

TO MINE. v. n. [from the noun.] To dig mines or burrows;

And miners crush'd beneath their mines are found. Dryden.
2. One who makes military mines.
As the bombardier levels his mischief at cities, the miner busies himself in ruining private houses. Tatler.

MINERAL. n. f. [minerals, Lat.] Fossile body; matter dug out of mines. All metals are minerals; but all minerals are not metals.
She did confess, she had
For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and ling'ring
By inches waste you. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
The minerals of the kingdom, of lead, iron, copper, and tin, are of great value. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton's Par. Lost.
Minerals; nitre with vitriol; common salt with alum; and sulphur with vitriol. Woodward.

MINERAL. adj. Consisting of fossile bodies.
By experience upon bodies in any mine, a man may conjecture at the metallick or mineral ingredients of any mass found there. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

MINERALIST. adj. [from mineral.] One skilled or employed in minerals.
A mine-digger may meet with a gem or a mineral, which he knows not what to make of till he shews it a jeweller or a mineralist. Boyle.

The metals and minerals which are lodged in the perpendicular intervals do still grow, to speak in the mineralist's phrase, or receive additional increase. Woodward.

MINERALOGIST. n. f. [mineralogie, French; from mineral and λογος.] One who discourses on minerals.
Many authors deny it, and the exactest mineralogists have rejected it. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

Her rising fears, and mingled with the rest. Addison.

MINGLED. n. f. [from the verb.] Mixture; medley; confused mass.
Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines. Shakespeare.
Neither can I defend my Spanish Fryar; though the comical parts are diverting, and the serious moving, yet they are of an unnatural mingle. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

MINGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who mingles.

MINIATURE. n. f. [miniature, French.]
1. Representation in a small compass; representation less than the reality.
The water, with twenty bubbles, not content to have the picture of their face in large, would in each of these bubbles set forth the miniature of them. Sidney, b. ii.
If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature: in order to keep our posterity from dwindling, we have instituted a tall club. Addison's Guard.
The hidden ways
Of nature would'st thou know? how first she frames
All things in miniature? thy specular orb
Apply to well dissected kernels: lo!
Strange forms arise, in each a little plant
Unfolds its boughs: observe the slender threads
Of first beginning trees, their roots, their leaves,
In narrow feeds describ'd. Philips.
2. Gay

Four faithful handmaids the ſoft rites prepare. Pope.
MINISTRATION.

MIN

MINISTRATION. n. f. [from miniſtro, Latin.]
1. Agency; intervention; office of an agent delegated or com-miſſioned by another.
God made him the inſtrument of his providence to me, as he hath made his own land to him, with this difference, that God, by his miniſtration to me, intends to do him a favour.
Taylor's living holy.
Though ſometimes effected by the immediate fiat of the divine will, yet I think they are moſt ordinarily done by the miniſtration of angels. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. Service; office; eccleſiaſtical function.
If the preſent miniſtration be more glorious than the former, the miniſter is more holy. Atterbury's Sermons.
MINIUM. n. f. [Latin.]
Melt lead in a broad earthen veſſel unglazed, and ſtir it continually till it be calcined into a grey powder; this is called the calx of lead; continue the fire, ſtirring it in the ſame manner, and it becomes yellow; in this ſtate it is uſed in painting, and is called mafficot or mafficot; after this put it into a reverberatory furnace, and it will calcine further, and become of a fine red, which is the common minium or red lead: among the ancients minium was the name for cinnabar: the modern minium is uſed externally, and is excellent in cleaning and healing old ulcers. Hill's Mat. Med.
MINISTRY. n. f. [contracted from miniſtry; miniſterium, Lat.]
1. Office; ſervice.
So far is an indiſtinction of all perſons, and, by conſe-quence, an anarchy of all things, ſo far from being agreeable to the will of God, declared in his great houſhold, the world, and eſpecially in all the miniſtries of his proper houſehold the church, that there was never yet any time, I believe, ſince it was a number, when ſome of its members were not more ſacred than others. Sprat's Sermons.
2. Office of one ſet apart to preach; eccleſiaſtical function.
Their miniſtry perform'd, and race well run,
Their doctrine and their ſtory written left,
They die. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. xii.
Saint Paul was miraculoſly called to the miniſtry of the goſpel, and had the whole doctrine of the goſpel from God by immediate revelation; and was appointed the apoſtrophe of the Gentiles for propagating it in the heathen world. Locke.
3. Agency; interpoſition.
The natural world he made after a miraculous manner;
but directs the affairs of it ever ſince by ſtanding rules, and the ordinary miniſtry of ſecond cauſes.
The poets introduced the miniſtry of the gods, and taught the ſeparate exiſtence of human ſouls. Bentley's Sermons.
4. Buſineſs.
He ſafe from loud alarms,
Abhor'd the wicked miniſtry of arms. Dryden's Zen.
5. Perſons employed in the public affairs of a ſtate.
I converſe in full freedom with many conſiderable men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as happening to have made acquaintance at court more under one miniſtry than another. Swift.
MINNOCK. n. f. Of this word I know not the preſiſe meaning. It is not unlikely that minnock and minx are originally the ſame word.
An aſs's noſe I fix'd on his head;
Anon his Thirſe muſt be anſwer'd,
And forth my minnock comes. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
MINNOW. n. f. [minne, French.] A very ſmall fiſh; a pink:
a corruption of minim, which ſee.
Hear you this triton of the minnows? Shakeſp. Macbeth.
The minnow, when he is in perfect ſeaſon, and not ſick, which is only preſently after ſpawning, hath a kind of dappled or waved colour, like a panther, on his ſides, inclining to a greeniſh and ſky-colour, his belly being milk-white, and his back almoſt black or blackiſh: he is a ſharp biter at a ſmall worm in hot weather, and in the Spring they make excellent minnow tantes; for being waſhed well in ſalt, and their heads and tails cut off, and their guts taken out, being fried with yolks of eggs, primroſes and tanſy. Walton's Angler.
The nimble turning of the minnow is the perfection of min- now fiſhing. Walton's Angler.
MINOR. adj. [Latin.]
1. Petty; inconſiderable.
If there are petty errors and minor lapſes, not conſiderably injurious unto faith, yet is it not ſate to condemn inferi-our fallities. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
2. Leſs; ſmaller.
They altered this cuſtom from caſes of high concernment to the moſt trivial debates, the minor part ordinarily entering their proteſt. Clarendon.
The difference of a third part in ſo large and collective an account is not ſtrange, if we conſider how differently they are ſet forth in minor and leſs miſtakeable numbers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

full grown. Collier's View of the Stage.
Long as the year's dull circle ſeems to run,
When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one. Pope.
The nobleſt blood of England having been ſhed in the grand rebellion, many great families became extinct, or ſupported only by minors. Swift.
A minor or infant cannot be ſaid to be contumacious, becauſe he cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian. Atterbury's Parergon.
2. The ſecond or particular propoſition in the fyllogiſm.
The ſecond or minor propoſition was, that this kingdom hath cauſe of juſt fear of overthrow from Spain. Bacon.
He ſuppoſed that a philoſopher's brain was like a foreſt, where ideas are ranged like animals of ſeveral kinds; that the major is the male, the minor the female, which copulate by the middle term, and engender the concluſion. Arbutnot.
To MINORATE. v. a. [from minor, Lat.] To leſſen; to diminiſh. A word not yet admitted into the language.
This it doth not only by the advantageous aſſiſtance of a tube, but by ſhewing in what degrees diſtance minorates the object. Glanville's Sceſſ.
MINORATION. n. f. [from minorate.] The act of leſſening; diminution; decreaſe. A word not admitted.

Is put into the truſt of Richard Gloſter. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
Theſe changes in religion ſhould be ſtaid, until the king were of years to govern by himſelf: this the people apprehending worſe than it was, a queſtion was raiſed, whether, during the king's minority, ſuch alterations might be made or
no. Hayward's Edw. VI.
Henry the Eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his ſon, procur'd an act to paſs, that no ſtatute made during the minority of the king ſhould bind him or his ſucceſſors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the fiſt act that paſſed in king Edward the Sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon's Henry VII.
If there be evidence, that it is not many ages ſince nature was in her minority, this may be taken for a good proof that ſhe is not eternal. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Their counſels are warlike and ambitious, though ſome-thing tempered by the minority of their king. Temple.
2. The ſtate of being leſs.
From this narrow time of geſtation may enſue a minority, or ſmallneſs in the excluſion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

MINSTREL. n. f. [menſtreil, Spaniſh; menſtrallus, low Latin.]
A muſician; one who plays upon inſtruments.
Hark how the minſtrels 'gin to ſhrill aloud
Their merry muſick that reſounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spencer's Epithal.
I will give you the minſtrel. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
—Then I will give you the ſerving creature. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
I to the vulgar am become a jeſt;
Eſteemed as a minſtrel at a feaſt. Sandy's Paraphraſe.
Theſe fellows
Were once the minſtrels of a country ſhow;
Follow'd the prizes through each paltry town,
By trumpet-cheeks and bloated faces known.
Often our ſeers and poets have confeſs'd,
That muſick's force can tame the furious beaſt;
His rage; the lion drop his creſted mane,
Attentive to the ſong; the lynx forget
His wrath to man, and lick the minſtrel's feet. Prior.
MINSTRELSEY. n. f. [from minſtrel.]
1. Muſick; inſtrumental harmony.
Apollo's ſelf will envy at his play,
And all the world applaud his minſtreſſey. Davies.

MIN

That loving wretch that swears,
'Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,
Which he in her angelick finds,
Would swear as justly, that he hears,
In that day's rude hoarse minstrelsy, the spheres. Donne.
I began,
Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
To meditate my rural minstrelsy,
Till fancy had her fill. Milton.
2. A number of musicians.
Ministring spirits train'd up in feast, and song!
Such hast thou arm'd the minstrelsy of heav'n. Milton.
MINT. n. f. [mintre, Saxon; menthe, Fr. mentha, Latin.] A plant.
The mint is a verticillate plant with labiated flowers, consisting of one leaf, whose upper-lip is arch'd, and the under-lip divided into three parts; but both of them are so cut, that the flower seems to be divided into four parts, the two lips scarcely appearing: these flowers are collected into thick whorles in some species, but in others they grow in a spike; each flower having four seeds succeeding it, which are inclosed in the flower-cup: it hath a creeping root, and the whole plant has a strong aromatick scent. Miller.
Then rubb'd it o'er with newly-gather'd mint,
A wholesome herb, that breath'd a grateful scent. Dryden.
MINT. n. f. [mintre, Dutch; myneenan, to coin, Saxon.]

To view myself infus'd an inward light,
Whereby my soul, as by a mirror true,
Of her own form may take a perfect sight. Davies.
But opposite in level'd West was set
His mirror, with full face borrowing her light
From him. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
Mirror of poets, mirror of our age,
Which her whole face beholding on thy stage,
Pleas'd and displeas'd with her own faults, endures
A remedy like those whom music cures. Waller.
By chance he spy'd a mirror while he spoke,
And gazing there beheld his alter'd look;
Wondering, he saw his features and his hue,
So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew.
Late as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air,
In the clear mirror of thy ruling star,
I saw, alas! some dread event impending.
fixed, an exemplar; for that on which the eye ought to be The works of nature are no less exact, than if the did both behold and study how to express some absolute shape or mirror always present before her. Hooker, b. i.

MIS

MISCREATE. adj. [mis and created.] Formed unnaturally, or illegitimately; made as by a blunder of nature.

Then made he head against his enemies,
And Ymmer flew or Logris miscreate. Fa. Q. b. ii.
Effoons he took that miscreated fair,
And that false other sprite, on whom he spread
A seeming body of the subtle air. Spenser.

That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading;
With opening titles miscreate, whose right
Suits not in native colours with the truth. Shakespeare.
MISDEED. n. f. [mis and deed.] Evil action.
O God,
If thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
Evils, which our own misdeeds have wrought. Milton.
Chas'd from a throne, abandon'd, and exil'd
For foul misdeeds, were punishments too mild. Dryden.

To MISDEEM. v. a. [mis and deem.] To judge ill of; to mistake.
All unweeting an enchanter bad
His sense abus'd, and made him to misdeem
My loyalty, not such as it did seem. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Besides, were we unchangeable in will,
And of a wit that nothing could misdeem;
Equal to God, whose wisdom shineth still
And never errs, we might ourselves esteem. Davies.

To MISDEMEAN. v. a. [mis and demean.] To behave ill.
From frailty
And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,
Have misdeem'd yourself. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

A drop through his flesh did flow,
Which by misdiet daily greater grew. Fairy Queen, b. i.

To MISDISTINGUISH. v. a. [mis and distinguish.] To make wrong distinctions.
If we imagine a difference where there is none, because we distinguish where we should not, it may not be denied that we misdistinguish. Hooker, b. iii.

To MISDO. v. a. [mis and do.] To do wrong; to commit a crime; to offend.
Afford me place to shew what recompence
T'wards thee I intend for what I have misdone. Milton.
To MISDO. v. n. To commit faults.
Try the erring soul
Not wilfully misdoing, but unaware Mistaken. Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

The worst is, to think ourselves safe so long as we keep our injuries from the knowledge of men, and out of our own view, without any awe of that all-seeing eye that observes all our misdoings. L'Estrange.
I have misdone, and I endure the smart,
Loth to acknowledge, but more loth to part. Dryden.

MISDOER. n. f. [mis and do.] An offender; a criminal; a malefactor.
Were they not contained in duty with a fear of law, which inflicteth sharp punishments to misdoers, no man should enjoy any thing. Spenser on Ireland.

To MISDOUBT. v. a. [mis and doubt.] To suspect of deceit or danger.
If the only misdoubted me, I were in heaven; for quickly I would bring sufficient assurance. Sidney, b. ii.
I do not misdoubt my wife, but I would be loth to turn them both together; a man may be too confident. Shakespeare.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth ev'ry bush;
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

If you misdoubt me that I am not free,
I know not how I shall assure you farther. Shakespeare.
To believe his wiles my truth can move,
Is to misdoubt my reason or my love. Dryden.

MISDOUBT. n. f. [mis and doubt.]
1. Suspicion of crime or danger.
He cannot so precisely weed this land,

MIS

As his misdoubts present occasion;
His foes are so enroved with his friends,
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so and shake a friend. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

2. Irresolution; hesitation.
York, feel thy fearful thoughts,
And change misdoubt to resolution. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
MISE. n. f. [French.] Issue. Law term.
To MISEMPLOY. v. a. [mis and employ.] To use to wrong purposes.

Their frugal fathers gains they misemploy,
And turn to point and pearl, and ev'ry female toy. Dryd.
Some taking things upon trust, misemploy their power by lazily enslaving their minds to the dictates of others. Locke.
That vain and foolish hope, which is misemployed on temporal objects, produces many sorrows. Addison's Spect.

They grew dissolute and prophane; and by misemploying the advantages which God had thrown into their laps, provoked him to withdraw them. Atterbury.
MISEMPLOYMENT. n. f. [mis and employment.] Improper application.
An improvident expence, and misemployment of their time and faculties. Hale's Origin of Maritime.

MISER. n. f. [miser, Latin.]
1. A wretched person; one overwhelmed with calamity.
Do not disdain to carry with you the woful words of a miser now despairing; neither be afraid to appear before her, bearing the base title of the fender. Sidney, b. ii.
I wish that it may not prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune to have met with such a miser as I am. Sidney.

Fair son of Mars, that seek with warlike spoil
And great achievements, great yourself to make, Vouchsafe to stay your steed for humble miser's sake. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. A wretch; a mean fellow.
Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!
I am defended of a gentler blood. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
3. A wretch covetous to extremity; one who in wealth makes himself miserable by the fear of poverty.

Though he be dearer to my soul than rest
To weary pilgrims, or to misers gold,
Rather than wrong Castilio I'd forget her. Ortwin's Orphan.
No silver fancies by dying misers giv'n;
Here brib'd the rage of ill-requited heav'n;
But such plain roofs as piety could raise,
And only vocal with the Maker's praise. Pope.

MISERABLE. adj. [miserable, French; miser, Latin.]
1. Unhappy; calamitous; wretched.
O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd!
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again? Shakespeare.
Most miserable is the desire that's glorious. Shakespeare.
What's more miserable than discontent? Shakespeare.
It is probable that there will be a future state, and then how miserable is the voluptuous unbeliever left in the lurch. South's Sermons.

What hopes delude thee, miserable man? Dryden's Æn.
2. Wretched; worthless.
Miserable comforters are ye all. Job xvi. 2.
3. Culpably parsimonious; stingy.

MISERABLENESS. n. f. [from miserable.] State of misery.
MISERABLY. adv. [from miserable.]
1. Unhappily; calamitously.
Of the five employed by him, two of them quarrell'd, one of which was slain, and the other hanged for it; the third drowned himself; the fourth, though rich, came to beg his bread; and the fifth was miserably stabbed to death. South.

2. Wretchedly; meanly.
As the love I bear you makes me thus invite you; so the same love makes me ashamed to bring you to a place, where you shall be so, not spoken by ceremony but by truth, miserably entertained. Sidney, b. ii.

3. Covetously.
MISERY. n. f. [miseria, Latin; miserere, French.]
1. Wretchedness; unhappiness.
My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
Happiness, in its full extent, is the utmost pleasure we are capable of, and misery the utmost pain. Locke.

2. Calamity; misfortune; cause of misery.
When we our betters see bearing our woes,
We scarcely think our miseries our foes.
The gods from heav'n survey the fatal strife,
And mourn the miseries of human life. Dryden's Æn.

3. [From miser.] Covetousness; avarice. Not in use.
He look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o' th' world: he covers less Than misery itself would give. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

In a fabrick of forty thousand pounds charge, I with thirty pounds laid out before in an exact model; for a little misery may easily breed some absurdity of greater charge. Watson.
MISERABLE. adj.

MIS

MISBESTEM. n. f. [mis and stem.] Disregard; flight.
To MISFASHION. v. a. [mis and fashion.] To form wrong.
A thing in reason impossible, thorough their misfashioned preconcept, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures of God. Hakewill on Providence.

To MISFORM. v. a. [mis and form.] To put in an ill form.
His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
And that misformed shape misshaped more. Spenser.
MISFORTUNE. n. f. [mis and fortune.] Calamity; ill luck; want of good fortune.

Fortune thus 'gan fay, misery and misfortune is all one,
And of misfortune, fortune hath only the gift. Sidney.
What world's delight, or joy of living speech,
Can heart so plung'd in sea of sorrows deep,
And heaped with so huge misfortunes reach? Fa. Q.
Consider why the change was wrought;
You'll find it his misfortune, not his fault. Addison.

To MISGIVE. v. a. [mis and give.] To fill with doubt; to deprive of confidence. It is used always with the reciprocal pronoun.
As Henry's late prefacing prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond;
So doth my heart misgive me in these conflicts
What may befall him, to his harm or ours. Shakespeare.

This is strange! Who hath got the right Anne?
My heart misgives me. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Yet off his heart divine of something ill,
Misgave him. Milton.

If a conscience thus qualified and informed, be not the measure by which a man may take a true estimate of his abjection, the sinner is left in the plunge of infinite doubts, suspicions, and misgivings, both as to the measures of his present duty, and the final issues of his future reward. South.
His heart misgave him, that these were so many meeting-places; but, upon communicating his suspicions, I soon made him easy. Addison's Freeholder, N° 47.

To MISGOVERN. v. a. [mis and govern.] To govern ill; to administer unfaithfully.
Solymann charged him bitterly, that he had misgoverned the state, and inverted his treasures to his own private use. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

MISGOVERNED. adj. [from misgovern.] Rude; uncivilized.
Rude, misgovern'd hands, from window tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on king Richard's head. Shakespeare.
MISGOVERNANCE. n. f. [mis and governance.] Irregularity.
Thy mule too long lumbereth in forrowing,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance. Spenser's Past.

MISGOVERNMENT. n. f. [mis and government.]
1. Ill administration of publick affairs.
Men lay the blame of those evils whereof they know not the ground, upon publick misgovernment. Raleigh's Essays.
2. Ill management.

Men are miserable, if their education hath been so undisciplined, as to leave them unfurnished of skill to spend their time; but most miserable, if such misgovernment and unskillfulness make them fall into vicious company. Taylor.
3. Irregularity; inordinate behaviour.

There is not chastity enough in language
Without offence to utter them: thus, pretty lady,
I am forty for thy much misgovernment. Shakespeare.
MISGUIDANCE. n. f. [mis and guidance.] False direction.
The Nicene council fixed the equinox the twenty-first of March for the finding out of Easter; which has caused the misguidance from the sun which we lie under in respect of Easter, and the moveable feasts. Holder on Time.

Whoever deceives a man, makes him ruin himself; and by causing an error in the great guide of his actions, his judgment, he causes an error in his choice, the misguidance of which must naturally engage him to his destruction. South.
To MISGUIDE. v. a. [mis and guide.] To direct ill; to lead the wrong way.

Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect those which favour the other, is wilfully to misguide the understanding; and is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debates it. Locke.
Misguided prince! no longer urge thy fate,
Nor tempt the hero to unequal war.
Of all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgment, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

MISHAP. n. f. [mis and hap.] Ill chance; ill luck; calamity.
To tell you what miserable mishaps fell to the young prince of Macedon his cousin, I should too much fill your ears with strange horrors. Sidney, b. ii.
Since we are thus far entered into the consideration of her mishaps, tell me, have there been any more such tempests wherein the hath thus wretchedly been wrecked. Spenser.

MIS

Sir knight, take to you wonted strength,
And master these mishaps with patient might. Fa. Queen.
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps. Shakespeare.
It cannot be

But that success attends him: if mishap,
Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers; since no place like this Can fit his punishment, or your revenge. Milton's P. Left.
If the worst of all mishaps hath fallen,
Speak; for he could not die unlike himself. Denham.

Mr'SHMASH. n. f. [Ans.] A low word. A mingle or hotch-potch.
To MISINFER. v. a. [mis and infer.] To infer wrong.
Nestorius teaching rightly, that God and man are distinct natures, did thereupon misinfer, that in Christ those natures can by no conjunction make one person. Hooker, l. v.

To MISINFORM. v. a. [mis and inform.] To deceive by false accounts.
Some belonged to a man of great dignity, and not as that wicked Simon had misinformed. 2 Mac. iii. 11.
By no means trust to your servants, who mislead you, or misinform you; the reproach will lie upon yourself. Bacon.
Bid her well beware,

Left by some fair-appearing good surpriz'd,
She dictate false; and misinform the will
To do what God expressly hath forbid. Milton's Par. Left.
MISINFORMATION. n. f. [from misinform.] False intelligence; false accounts.

Let not such be discouraged as deserve well, by misinformation of others, perhaps out of envy or treachery. Bacon.
The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insulting benefactor, when backed with greatness, and let on by misinformation. South's Sermons.

To MISINTERPRET. v. a. [mis and interpret.] To explain to a wrong sense.
The gentle reader rests happy to hear the worthiest works misinterpreted, the clearest actions obscured, and the innocentest life traduced. Benj. Johnson.
After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquoted and misinterpreted. Arbutnot on Coins.

To MISJOIN. v. a. [mis and join.] To join unfitly or improperly.
In reason's absence mimic fancy wakes
To imitate her; but misjoining shapes,
Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams;
Ill-matching words, and deeds, long past, or late. Milton.

Luther, more mistaking what he read,
Misjoins the sacred body with the bread. Dryden.
To MISJUDGE. v. a. [mis and judge.] To form false opinions; to judge ill.

Where we misjudge the matter, a miscarriage draws pity after it; but when we are transported by pride, our ruin lies at our own door. L'Estrange.
You misjudge;
You see through love, and that deludes your sight;
As, what is straight, seems crooked through the water. Dryden's All for Love.

By allowing himself in what is innocent, he breeds offence to his weak and misjudging neighbour. Atterbury's Sermons.
Infatuate!
Too long misjudging have I thought thee wile,
But sure relentless folly steals thy breast. Pope.

To MISLAY. v. a. [mis and lay.] To lay in a wrong place.
Mean time my worthy wife, our arms mislay'd,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd. Dryden.
The fault is generally mislaid upon nature; and there is often a complaint of want of parts, when the fault lies in want of a due improvement. Locke.

If the butler be the tell-tale, mislay a spoon, so as he may never find it. Swift's Rules to Servants.
MISLAY. n. f. [from mislay.] One that puts in the wrong place.
The mislayer of a mere-stone is to blame: but the unjust judge is the capital remover of land-marks, when he defineth amiss of lands. Bacon's Essays.

To MISLEAD. v. a. [mis and lead.] To guide a wrong way; to betray to mischief or mistake.
Take, oh take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn. Shakespeare.

Those we love,
That are misled upon your cousin's part. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Poor misled men: your states are yet worthy pity.
If you would hear, and change your savage minds, Leave to be mad. Benj. Johnson's Cataline.

Trust not to your servants who mislead or misinform you. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
O theivish

MIS

O thievish night,
Why should'st thou but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the flars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller?
What can they teach and not mislead?
Ignorant of themselves, of God much more?
Thou who hast taught me to forgive the ill,
And recompense, as friends, the good misled;
If mercy be a precept of thy will,
Return that mercy on thy servant's head.
The imagination, which is of simple perception, doth never of itself, and directly, mislead us; yet it is the almost fatal means of our deception.
Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, and scrutiny of each successive desire, whether the satisfaction of it does not interfere with our true happiness, and mislead us from it.
'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
Appear in writing or in judging ill:
But of the two less dangerous is th' offence
To tire our patience, than mislead our sense.
MISLEADER. n. f. [from mislead.] One that leads to ill.
When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast.
The tutor and the feeder of my riots;
Till then I banish thee on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my misleaders.
They have disclaimed and abandoned those heretical phantasmies touching our Saviour, wherein by their misleaders they had been anciently plunged.
MISLIKE. v. a. [mis and like.] To disapprove; to be not pleased with; to dislike.
It was hard to say, whether he more liked his doings, or misliked the effect of his doings.
Tertullian was not deceived in the nature of the place;
but Aquinas, who misliked this opinion, followed a worse.
Judge not the preacher, for he is thy judge:
If thou mislike him, thou conceiv'st him not.
MISLIKE. n. f. [from the verb.] Disapprobation; dislike.
Setting your scorn and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason, why the lady Gray
Should not become my wife.
Their angry gestures with mislike disclose,
How much his speech offends their noble ears.
MISLIKER. n. f. [from mislike.] One that disapproves.
Open flatterers of great men, privy mislikers of good men, fair speakers with smiling countenances.
MISLEN. n. f. [corrupted from miscellane.] Mixed corn; as,
wheat and rice.
They commonly sow those lands with wheat, mislen, and barley.
To MISLE. v. n. [from mis.] To rain in imperceptible drops, like a thick mist: properly misle.
Y enough, thou mournedst fast,
Now ginnest to mizzle, hic we homeward fast.
The very small drops of a misling rain descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles.
This cold precipitates the vapours either in dews, or, if the vapours more copiously ascend, they are condensed into misling, or into showers of small rain, falling in numerous, thick, small drops.
In misling days when I my thresher heard,
With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd.
To MISLIVE. v. n. [mis and live.] To live ill.
Should not thilke God, that gave him that good,
Eke cherish his child if in his ways he stood,
For if he mislive in leudness and lust,
Little boots all the wealth and the trust.
To MISMANAGE. v. a. [mis and manage.] To manage ill.
The debates of most princes councils would be in danger to be mismanaged, since those who have a great stroke in them are not always perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism.
MISMANAGEMENT. n. f. [mis and management.] Ill management; ill conduct.
It is mismanagement more than want of abilities, that men have reason to complain of in those that differ from them.
The falls of fav'rites, projects of the great,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new,
All neither wholly false, nor wholly true.
To MISMATCH. v. a. [mis and mark.] To mark with the wrong token.
Things are mismarked in contemplation and life for want of application or integrity.
To MISMATCH. v. a. [mis and match.] To match un-suitably.

MIS

What at my years forsaken! had I
Ugly, or old, *mis*matcht to my desires,
My natural defects had taught me
To set me down contented.
To MISNAME. v. a. [mis and name.] To call by the wrong name.
They make one man's fancies, or perhaps failings, confining laws to others, and convey them as such to their successors, who are bold to misname all unobsequiousness to their inco-gnitancy, presumption.
MISNOMER. n. f. [French.] In law, an indictment, or any other act vacated by a wrong name.
To MISOBSEERVE. v. a. [mis and observe.] Not to observe accurately.
They understand it as early as they do language; and, if I misobserve not, they love to be treated as rational creatures sooner than is imagined.
MISOGAMIST. n. f. [μισος and γαμος.] A marriage hater.
MISOGYNY. n. f. [μισος and γυνή.] Hatred of women.
To MISORDER. v. a. [mis and order.] To conduct ill; to manage irregularly.
If the child mis either in forgetting a word, or misorder-
ing the sentence, I would not have the matter frown.
Yet few of them come to any great age, by reason of their misordered life when they were young.
The time misorder'd doth in common sense
Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our faculty up.
MISORDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Irregularity; disorderly proceedings.
When news was brought to Richard the second, that his uncles, who sought to reform the misorders of his councillors, were assembled in a wood near unto the court, merrily demanded of one Sir Hugh a Linne, who had been a good military man, but was then somewhat distraught of his wits, what he would advise him to do? Illue out, quoth Sir Hugh, and slay them every mother's son; and when thou hast so done, thou hast killed all the faithful friends thou hast in England.
MISORDERLY. adj. [from misorder.] Irregular.
His over-much fearing of you drives him to seek some mis- orderly shift, to be helped by some other book, or to be prompted by some other scholar.
To MISPEL. v. a. [mis and spell.] To spell wrong.
She became a profest enemy to the arts and sciences, and scarce ever wrote a letter to him without wilfully mispeeling his name.
To MISPEND. v. a. preterite and part. passive mispent. [mis and spend.]
1. To spend ill; to waste; to consume to no purpose; to throw away.
What a deal of cold business doth a man mispent the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, gathering and venting news.
First guilty conscience does the mirror bring,
Then thar remorse shoots out her angry sting;
And anxious thoughts, within themselves at strife,
Upbraid the long mispent, luxurious life.
I this writer's want of sense arraign,
Treat all his empty pages with disdain,
And think a grave reply mispent and vain.
He who has lived with the greatest care will find, upon a review of his time, that he has something to redeem; but he who has mispent much has still a greater concern.
Wife men retrieve, as far as they are able, every mispent or unprofitable hour which has slipped from them.
2. To waste, with the reciprocal pronoun.
Now let the arched knife their thirsty limbs
Dissever, for the genial moisture due
To apples, otherwise mispends itself
In barren twigs.
MISPENDER. n. f. [from mispent.] One who spends ill or prodigally.
I very much suspect the excellency of those mens parts who are dissolute, and careless mispenders of their time.
MISPERSUASION. n. f. [mis and persuasion.] Wrong notion;
false opinion.
Some mispersuasions concerning the Divine Attributes tend to the corrupting mens manners.
To MISPLACE. v. a. [mis and place.] To put in a wrong place.
I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders,
Before I'll see the crown so foul misplac'd.
What little arts govern the world! we need not
An armed enemy or corrupted friend,
When service but misplac'd, or love mistaken,
Performs the work.
Is a man betrayed by such agents as he employs? He mis- placed his confidence, took hypocrisy for fidelity, and so relied upon the services of a pack of villains.

MIS

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity; we, who could no way foresee the effect?
To MISPOINT. v. a. [mis and point.] To confuse sentences by wrong punctuation.
To MISPRESE. v. a. Sometimes it signifies mistaken, from the French verb mesprendre; sometimes undervalued or disdained, from the French verb mespriser.
1. To mistake.
You spend your passion on a misprisd mood;
I am not guilty of Lyfander's blood.
2. To slight; to scorn; to despise.
He's so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people who best know him, that I am altogether misprisd.
Pluck indignation on a maid, too virtuous
For the contempt of empire.
MISPRISION. n. f. [from mispriser.]
1. Scorn; contempt.
Here take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift!
That doth in vile misprision shackle up
My love, and her desert.
2. Mistake; misconception.
Thou hast mistaken quite,
And laid thy love juice on some true love's sight;
Of thy misprision must perforce ensue
Some true love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.
We feel such or such a sentiment within us, and herein is no cheat or misprision; it is truly so, and our sense concludes nothing of its rite.
3. [In common law.] It signifies neglect, negligence, or oversight. Misprision of treason is the concealment, or not disclosing, of known treason; for the which the offenders are to suffer imprisonment during the king's pleasure, lose their goods and the profits of their lands during their lives. Mis- prision of felony, is the letting any person, committed for treason or felony, or suspicion of either, to go before he be indicted.
To MISPROPORTION. v. a. [mis and proportion.] To join without due proportion.
MISPROUD. adj. [mis and proud.] Vitiously proud. Obsolete.
Now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt, Impairing Henry, strengthning misproud York.
To MISQUOTE. v. a. [mis and quote.] To quote falsely.
Look how we can, or fad, or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks.
After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquoted.
To MISRECITE. v. a. [mis and recite.] To recite not according to the truth.
He misrecites the argument, and denies the consequence,
which is clear.
To MISRECKON. v. a. [mis and reckon.] To reckon wrong;
to compute wrong.
Whoever finds a mistake in the sum total, must allow himself out, though after repeated trials he may not see in which article he has misreckoned.
To MISRELATE. v. a. [mis and relate.] To relate inaccurately or falsely.
To satisfy me that he misrelated not the experiment, he brought two or three small pipes of glass, which gave me the opportunity of trying it.
MISRELATION. n. f. [from misrelate.] False or inaccurate narrative.
Mine aim was only to press home those things in writing, which had been agitated between us by word of mouth; a course much to be preferred before verbal conferences, as being less subject to mistakes and misrelations, and wherein pa-ralogisms are more quickly detected.
To MISREMEMBER. v. a. [mis and remember.] To mistake by trusting to memory.
If I much misremember not, I had such a spirit from peas kept long enough to lose their verdure.
To MISREPORT. v. a. [mis and report.] To give a false account of; to give an account disadvantageous and false.
His doctrine was misreported, as though he had everywhere preached this, not only concerning the Gentiles, but also touching the Jews.
A man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.
The wrong judgment that misleads us, and makes the will often fasten on the worse side, lies in misreporting upon the various comparisons of their.
MISREPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] False account; false and malicious representation.
We defend him not,
Only desire to know his crime: 'tis possible
It may be some mistake or misreport,
Some false suggestion, or malicious scandal.

MIS

As by flattery a man is usually brought to open his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction, and a slanderous mis- report of persons, he is often brought to shut the same even to his best and truest friends.
To MISREPRESENT. v. a. [mis and represent.] To represent not as it is; to falsify to disadvantage: mis often signifies not only error, but malice or mischief.
Two qualities necessary to a reader before his judgment should be allowed are, common honesty and common sense; and that no man could have misrepresented that paragraph,
unless he were utterly destitute of one or both.
While it is so difficult to learn the springs of some facts, and so easy to forget the circumstances of others, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious and inquisitive heads, who proceed altogether upon conjectures.
MISREPRESENTATION. n. f. [from misrepresent.]
1. The act of misrepresenting.
They have prevailed by misrepresentations, and other artifices, to make the successor look upon them as the only persons he can trust.
2. Account maliciously false.
Since I have shewn him his foul mistakes and injurious misrepresentations, it will become him publicly to own and retract them.
MISRULE. n. f. [mis and rule.] Tumult; confusion; revel;
unjust domination.
In the portal plac'd, the heav'n-born maid,
Enormous riot, and misrule survey'd.
And through his airy hall the loud misrule
Of driving tempest, is for ever heard.
MISS. n. f. [contracted from mistress.]
1. The term of honour to a young girl.
Where there are little masters and misses in a house, they are great impediments to the diversions of the servants.
2. A strumpet; a concubine; a whore; a prostitute.
All women would be of one piece,
The virtuous matron and the miss.
This gentle cock, for solace of his life,
Six misses had besides his lawful wife.
To MISS. v. a. [missen, Dutch and German.] Misfed preter.
miss part.
1. Not to hit by the mind; to mistake.
Nor can I miss the way, so strongly drawn
By this new-felt attraction, and instinct.
2. Not to hit by manual aim.
The life you boasted to your jav'lin giv'n,
Prince, you have miss'd.
3. To fail of obtaining.
If the desired above all things to have Orgalus, Orgalus feared nothing but to miss Parthenia.
So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that, which one unworthier may attain;
And die with grieving.
Where shall a maid's distracted heart find rest,
If she can miss it in her lover's breast?
When a man misses his great end, happiness, he will acknowledge he judged not right.
4. To discover something to be unexpectedly wanting.
Without him I found a weakness, and a mistrustfulness of myself, as one strayed from his best strength, when at any time I miss'd him.
In vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was miss'd.
5. To be without.
We cannot miss him; he does make out fire,
Fetch in our wood.
6. To omit.
She would never miss one day,
A walk to fine, a fight to gay.
7. To perceive want of.
My redoubld love and care,
May ever tend about thee to old age
With all things grateful cheer'd, and so supply'd,
That what by me thou hast lost thou least shalt miss.
He who has a firm, sincere friend, may want all the rest without missing them.
To MISS. v. n.
1. To fly wide; not to hit.
Flying bullets now
To execute his rage, appear too slow,
They miss or sweep but common souls away.
2. Not to succeed.
The general root of superstition is, that men observe when things hit, and not when they miss; and commit to memory the one, and forget and pass over the other.
3. To fail; to mistake.
4. To be lost; to be wanting.
My lord,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn.

MIS

Thy shepherds we hurt not, neither was there ought missing unto them.
For a time caught up to God, as once
Moses was in the mount, and missing long,
And the great Thibite, who on fiery wheels Rode up to heaven, yet once again to come. Milt. Par. R.
5. To miscarry; to fail.
Th' invention all admir'd, and each, how he
To be th' inventor mis'd, so easy it seem'd.
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
6. To fail to obtain, learn, or find: sometimes with of before the object.
Gritus missing of the Moldavian fell upon Maylat. Knolles.
The moral and relative perfections of the Deity are easy to be understood by us; upon the least reflection we cannot miss of them. Atterbury's Sermons.
Miss, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Loss; want.
In humble dales is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle,
And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his miss not mickle. Spenser's Pastoral.
I could have better spar'd a better man.
Oh, I should have a heavy mis of thee,
If I were much in love with vanity. Shakep. Henry IV.
If these papers have that evidence in them, there will be no great mis of those which are lost, and my reader may be satisfied without them. Locke.
2. Mistake; error.
He did without any great mis in the hardest points of grammar. Alcham's Schoolmaster.
MISSAL, n. f. [misale, Lat. missal, Fr.] The mass book.
By the rubric of the missal, in every solemn mass, the priest is to go up to the middle of the altar. Stillington.
TO MISSA'Y, v. n. [mis and say.] To say ill or wrong.
Their ill haviour garres men missay,
Both of their doctrine and their fay. Spenser's Past.
Diggon Davie, I bid her godday,
Or Diggon her is, or I missay. Spenser's Past.
We are not dwarfs, but of equal stature, if Vives missay
Hakewill on Providence.
TO MISSE'EM, v. n. [mis and seem.]
1. To make false appearance.
Poul Dueffla meet,
Who with her witchcraft and misseeming sweet Inveigled her to follow her desires unmeet. Fairy Queen.
2. To misbecome. Obsolete both.
Never knight I saw in such misseeming plight. Fa. Qy.
TO MISSE'VE, v. a. [mis and serve.] To serve unfaithfully.
Great men, who misseved their country, were fined very highly. Arbutnot on Coins.
TO MISSHA'PE, v. a. part, misshaped and misshapen. [mis and shape.] To shape ill; to form ill; to deform.
A rude misshapen, monstrous rablement. Fa. Qy.
His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
And that misshapen shape, misshapen more. Fairy Queen.
Him then she does transform to monstrous hues,
And horribly misshapen with ugly fights,
Captiv'd eternally in iron mews. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
This misshapen knave, Shakespeare's Tempest.
His mother was a witch. Shakespeare's Tempest.
And will she yet debate her eyes on me,
On me that halt and am misshapen thus. Shak. Rich. III.
Let the misshapen trunk that bears this head
Be round impaled with a glorious crown. Shakespeare.
Pride will have a fall: the beautiful trees go all to the wreck here, and only the misshapen and despicable dwarf is left standing. L'Estrange.
Pluto hates his own misshapen race,
Her sister furies fly her hideous face. Dryden's En.
They make bold to destroy ill-formed and misshapen productions. Locke.
The Alps broken into so many steps and precipices, form one of the most irregular, misshapen scenes in the world. Addis.
We ought not to believe that the banks of the ocean are really deformed, because they have not the form of a regular bulwark; nor that the mountains are misshapen, because they are not exact pyramids or cones. Bentley's Sermons.
Some figures monstrous and misshap'd appear Consider'd singly, or beheld too near,
Which but proportion'd to their site or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace. Pope.
2. In Shakespeare, perhaps, it once signifies ill directed: as, to shape a course.
Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Misshapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skill-less soldiers flask,
Is set on fire. Shakep. Romeo and Juliet.
MISSILE, adj. [missilis, Lat.] Thrown by the hand; striking at distance.
We bend the bow, or wing the missile dart. Pope.

MIS

MISSON, n. f. [missio, Latin.]
1. Commision; the state of being sent by supreme authority.
Her son tracing the desert wild,
All his great work to come before him set,
How to begin, how to accomplish best,
His end of being on earth, and mission high. Milt. Pa. Reg.
The divine authority of our mission, and the powers vested in us by the high-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus, are publicly disputed and denied. Atterbury.
2. Persons sent on any account, usually to propagate religion.
In these ships there should be a mission of three of the brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the sciences, manufactures, and inventions of all the world, and bring us books and patterns; and that the brethren should stay abroad till the new mission. Bacon's New Atlantis.
3. Dismission; discharge. Not in use.
In Cesar's army, somewhat the soldiers would have had, yet only demanded a mission or discharge, though with no instant it should be granted, but thought to wrench him to their other desires; whereupon with one cry they asked mission. Bacon's New Atlantis.
4. Faction; party. Not in use.
Glorious deeds, in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drove great Mars to faction. Shakep. Henry IV.
MISSIONARY, n. f. [missionaire, French.] One sent to propagate religion.
You mention the presbyterian missionary, who hath been persecuted for his religion. Swift.
Like mighty missioner you come,
Ad partes infidelium. Dryden.
MISSIVE, adj. [missive, French.]
1. Such as may be sent.
The king grants a licence under the great seal, called a conge d'ellire, to elect the person he has nominated by his letters missive. Aspliff's Paragon.
2. Used at distance.
In vain with darts a distant war they try,
Short, and more short, the missive weapons fly. Dryden.
MISSIVE, n. f. [French.]
1. A letter sent: it is retained in Scotland in that sense.
Great aids came in to him; partly upon missives, and partly volunteers from many parts. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. A messenger.
Rioting in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters; and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience. Shakespeare.
While wrapt in the wonder of it came missives from the king, who all hail'd me thane of Cawder. Shakep. Macbeth.
MISSPEAK, v. a. [mis and speak.] To speak wrong.
It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard;
Tell o'er thy tale again. Shakep. King Lear.
A mother delights to hear
Her early child mispeak half-utter'd words. Domin.
MIST, n. f. [mist, Saxon.]
1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.
Old Chaucer, like the morning star,
To us discovers day from far;
His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd
Which our dark nation long involv'd. Denham.
And mists condens'd to clouds obscure the sky,
And clouds dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Rowe.
As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew.
But hovering mists around his brows are spread,
And night with fable shades involves his head. Dryden.
A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.
2. Any thing that dims or darkens.
My peoples eyes were once blinded with such mists of sufpicion, they are soon misled into the most desperate actions.
King Charles.
His passion cast a mist before his sense,
And either made or magnify'd th' offence. Dryden.
TO MIST, v. a. [from the noun.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or steam.
Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then the lives. Shakep. King Lear.
MISTAKABLE, adj. [from mistake.] Liable to be conceived wrong.
It is not strange to see the difference of a third part in so large an account, if we consider how differently they are let forth in minor and less mistakable numbers. Brown.

MIS

TO MISTAKE, v. a. [mis and take.] To conceive wrong; to take something for that which it is not.
The towns, neither of the one side nor the other, willingly opening their gates to strangers, nor strangers willingly entering for fear of being mistaken. Sidney.
These did truly apprehend a great affinity between their practice of invocation of saints and the heathen idolatry, or else there was no danger one should be mistaken for the other.
Stillington.
This if neglected will make the reader very much mistake, and misunderstand his meaning, and render the sense very perplexed. Locke.
Fancy passes for knowledge, and what is prettily said is mistaken for solid. Locke.
Fools into the notion fall,
That vice or virtue there is none at all;
Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain,
'Tis to mistake them costs the time and pain. Pope.
TO MISTAKE, v. n. To err; not to judge right.
Seeing God found folly in his angels; mens judgments, which inhabit these houses of clay, cannot be without their mistakings. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Seldom any one mistakes in his names of simple ideas, or applies the name red to the idea green. Locke.
Servants mistake, and sometimes occasion misunderstanding, among friends. Swift.
MISTAKE, pret. and part. pass. of mistake for mistaken, and so retained in Scotland.
This dagger hath mistak'en; for lo! the sheath
Lies empty on the back of Mountague,
The point missteach'd in my daughter's bosom. Shakep.
TO BE MISTAKEN. To err.
England is so idly king'd.
— You are too much mistaken in this king:
Question, your grace, the late ambassadors,
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution. Shakep. Henry V.
Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
But cut the bond of union with that stroke. Waller.
MISTAKE, n. f. [from the verb.] Misconception; error.
He never shall find out fit mate; but such As some misfortune brings him, or mistake. Milton.
Infallibility is an absolute security of the understanding from all possibility of mistake in what it believes. Tillotson.
Those errors are not to be charged upon religion, which proceed either from the want of religion, or superstitious mistakes about it. Bentley's Sermons.
MISTAKINGLY, adv. [from mistaking.] Erroneously; falsely.
The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall which does indeed belong to the object. Boyle on Colours.
TO MISTAKE, v. a. [mis and take.] To state wrong.
They mistake the question, when they talk of pressing ceremonies. Bishop Sanders.
Such guides shall be set over the several congregations as will be sure to mislead them. Bishop Sanders.
The extravagances of the lawless life are the more consummate disorders of a mislaught or neglected youth. L'Estrange's Fables.
TO MISTE'LL, v. a. [mis and tell.] To tell unfaithfully or inaccurately.
TO MISTE'MPER, v. a. [mis and temper.] To temper ill; to disorder.
This inundation of missemp'd humour Refts by you only to be qualified. Shakep. King John.
MISTE'Y, adj. [from mistier, trade, French.] What mister, what kind of.
The redcross knight toward him crossed fast,
To weet what mister wight was to dismay'd,
There him he finds all fenceless and agast. Spenser.
TO MISTE'RM, v. a. [mis and term.] To term erroneously.
Hence banished, is banish'd from the world;
And world exil'd is death. That banished
Is death misterm'd. Shakep. Romeo and Juliet.
TO MISTH'NK, v. a. [mis and think.] To think ill; to think wrong.
How will the country, for these woful chances,
Misthink the king, and not be satisfy'd. Shakespeare.
We, the greatest, are misthought
For things that others do. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Thoughts! which how found they harbour in thy breast,
Adam! Misthought of her to thee so dear? Milton.
TO MIST'NE, v. a. [mis and time.] Not to time right; not to adapt properly with regard to time.
MISTINESS, n. f. [from misty.] Cloudiness; state of being overcast.
The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in the sudden vanishing of vapours from glass, or the blade of a sword, such as doth not at all detain or imbibe the moisture, for the mistiness scattereth immediately. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 91.

MIS

MISTION, n. f. [from mistus, Latin.] The state of being mingled.
In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living form as well as that of mistion, and though they wholly seem to retain unto the body, depart upon disunion. Browne.
Both bodies do, by the new texture resulting from their mision, produce colour. Boyle on Colours.
MISTLETOE, n. f. [myrtelzan, Saxon; mistel, Danish, bird-lime, and ran, a twig.] A plant.
The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a bason, divided into four parts, and beset with warts; the ovary which is produced in the female flowers is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flowers, and consists of four shorter leaves; this becomes a round berry full of a glutinous substance, inclosing a plain heart-shaped seed: this plant is always produced from seed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, as most other plants, but will always grow upon trees; from whence the ancients accounted it a super-plaut, who thought it to be an excrescence on the tree without the seed being previously lodged there, which opinion is now generally confuted. The manner of its propagation is as follows, viz. the mistletoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the seed from tree to tree; for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately furrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of, he strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this vis-cous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth rind trees: it is observable, that whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preserved by the curious in their collections of natural curiosities. Miller.
If snow do continue, sheepe hardly that fare
Crave mistle and ivie for them for to spare. Tusser's Husb.
A barren and detested vale, you see it is:
The trees, though Summer, yet forlorn and lean, O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistletoe. Shakespeare.
Mistletoe groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazles, and rarely upon oaks; the mistletoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green Winter and Summer, and beareth a white glittering berry; and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth. Bacon.
All your temples strow
With laurel green, and sacred mistletoe. Gay's Trivia.
MISTLIKE, adj. [mist and like.] Resembling a mist.
Good Romeo, hide thyself.
— Not I, unless the breath of heart-sick groans, Mistlike in fold me from the search of eyes. Shakespeare.
MISTO'LD, particip. pass. of mistell.
MISTO'OK, particip. pass. of mistake.
Look nymphs, and shepherds look,
What sudden blaze of majesty,
Too divine to be mistook. Milton.
MISTRESS, n. f. [mistresse, maitresse, French.]
1. A woman who governs: correlative to subject or to servant.
Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,
Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon
To stand's auspicious mistress. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Let us prepare
Some welcome for the mistress of the house. Shakespeare.
Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head and perish. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
He'll make your Paris louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe. Shakespeare.
I will not charm my tongue, I'm bound to speak;
My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed. Shakep. Othello.
The late queen's gentlewoman! a knight's daughter!
To be her mistress's mistress! the queen's queen. Shakespeare.
Rome now is mistress of the whole world, sea and land, to either pole. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.
Wonder not, sovereign mistress! if perhaps Thou can't, who art sole wonder; much less arm
Thy looks, the heav'n of mildness, with disdain. Milton.
Those who assert the lunar orb presides
O'er humid bodies, and the ocean guides;
Whose waves obsequious ebb, or swelling run
With the declining or encreasing moon;
With reason seem her empire to maintain
As mistress of the rivers and the main. Blackmore.
What a miserable spectacle, for a nation that had been mistress at sea so long! Arbutnot on Coins.
2. A woman who possesses faculties uninjured.
There had she enjoyed herself while she was mistress of herself, and had no other thoughts but such as might arise out of quiet senses. Sidney, l. ii.
Ages

MIS

Ages to come, that shall your bounty hear,
Will think you misfrets of the Indies were;
Though freighter bounds your fortune did confine,
In your large heart was found a wealthy mine. Waller.

3. A woman skilled in any thing.
A letter desires all young wives to make themselves misfret of Wingate's Arithmetick. Addison's Spect. N°. 92.

4. A woman teacher.
Erect publick schools, provided with the best and ablest masters and *misfret*s. Swift.

5. A woman beloved and courted.
They would not suffer the prince to confer with, or very rarely to see, his misfret, whom they pretended he should forthwith marry. Clarendon.

Nice honour still engages to requite
False *misfret*s and proud with flight for flight. Granville.

6. A term of contemptuous address.
Look you, pale *misfret*s,
Do you perceive the ghastliness of her eye? Shakespeare.

7. A whore; a concubine.
MISTRUST. n. f. [mis and trust.] Diffidence; suspicion; want of confidence.
He needs not our mistrust, since he delivers
Our offices, and what we have to do,
To the direction just. Shakspeare. Macbeth.
Not then mistrust, but tender love, enjoins
That I should mind thee oft; and mind thou me! Milton.

To MISTRUST. v. a. [mis and trust.] To suspect; to doubt;
to regard with diffidence.
Will any man alledge those mentioned human infirmities, as reasons why these things should be mistrusted or doubted
of. Hooker, b. ii.

By a divine instinct, mens minds mistrust
Enfuing danger; as by proof we see,
The waters swell before a boisterous storm. Shakspeare.
Fate her own book mistrusted at the fight,
On that side war, on this a single fight. Cowley.
The relation of a Spartan youth, that suffered a fox concealed under his robe to tear out his bowels, is mistrusted by men of business. Brown.

The gen'rous train complies,
Nor fraud mistrusts in virtue's fair disguise. Pope's Odyssey.

MISTRUSTFUL. adj. [mistrust and full.] Diffident; doubting.
I hold it cowardice
To rest mistrustful, where a noble heart
Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love. Shakspeare.
Here the mistrustful fowl no harm suspects,
So safe are all things which our king protects. Waller.

MISTRUSTFULNESS. n. f. [from mistrustful.] Diffidence; doubt.
Without him I found a weakness, and a mistrustfulness of myself, as one I trayed from his best strength, when at any time I mist him. Sidney, b. ii.

MISTRUSTFULLY. adv. [from mistrustful.] With suspicion; with mistrust.

MISTRUSTLESS. adj. [from mistrust.] Confident; unsuspecting.
Where he doth in stream mistrustless play,
Veil'd with night's robe, they stalk the shore abroad.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

MISTY. adj. [from mist.]
1. Clouded; overpread with mists.
The morrow fair with purple beams
Dispers'd the shadows of the misty night. Fairy Queen.
Loud howling wolves aroule the jades,
That drag the tragick melancholy night;
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead mens graves; and from their misty jaws
Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air. Shakspeare.
Parents overprize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection which alter the appearance, as things seem bigger in misty mornings. Watson.
Now smoaks with show'rs the misty mountain ground,
And floated fields lie undistinguish'd round. Pope.

from frosts: as for the time of their flowering, the moly of Homer flowers in May, and continues till July, and so do all the rest except the last, which is late in September: they are hardy, and will thrive in any soil. Mortimer's Hay.
The sovereign plant he drew,
And shew'd its nature, and its wondrous pow'r;
Black was the root, but milky white the flow'r;
Moly the name.
MO'LO'SSES. } n. f. [mellezzo, Italian.] Treacle; the spume or MO'LA'SSES. } cum of the juice of the sugar-cane.
MO'LO. n. f. A dull, stupid blockhead, a flock; a post: this owes its original to the French word momen, which signifies the gaming at dice in masquerade, the custom and delight of which is, that a strict silence is to be observed; whatsoever fun one stakes another covers, but not a word is to be spoken; from hence also comes our word mum for silence.
Hammer.
Mome, malthorse, capon, coxcomb, idiot, patch!
Either get thee from the door, or sit down at the hatch.
Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.
MO'MENT. n. f. [moment, Fr. momentum, Latin.]
1. Consequence; importance; weight; value.
We do not find that our Saviour reproved them of error, for thinking the judgment of the scribes to be worth the objecting, for esteeming it to be of any moment or value in matters concerning God. Hooker, b. ii.
I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
What towns of any moment but we have? Shakespeare.
It is an abstruse speculation, but also of far less moment and consequence to us than the others; seeing that without this we can evince the existence of God. Bentley's Sermon.
2. Force; impulsive weight; actuating power.
The place of publick prayer is a circumstance in the outward form, which hath moment to help devotion. Hooker.
Can these or such be any aid to us?

Or be a moment to our enterprise? Benj. Johnson.
Touch with lightest moment of impulse
His free-will, to her own inclining left In even scale. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
He is a capable judge; can hear both sides with an indiferent ear; is determined only by the moments of truth, and so retracts his past errors. Norris's Miscel.
3. An indivisible particle of time.
If I would go to hell for an eternal moment, or so, I could be knighted. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it: from this moment
The very frillings of my heart shall be
The frillings of my hand. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The imaginary reasoning of brutes is not a distinct reasoning, but performed in a physical moment. Hale.
Yet thus receiving and returning bliss
In this great moment, in this golden now,
When every trace of what, or when, or how,
Shou'd from my soul by raging love be torn. Prior.
MO'MENTALLY. adv. [from momentum, Latin.] For a moment.
Air but momentally remaining in our bodies, hath no pro-

1. A governor invested with absolute authority; a king.
I was
A morfel for a monarch. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth
Do all expect that you should route yourself. Shakespeare.
The father of a family or nation, that uses his servants like children, and advises with them in what concerns the commonweal, and thereby is willingly obeyed by them, is what the schools mean by a monarch. Temple's Miscel.
2. One superior to the rest of the same kind.
The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.
With ease distinguish'd is the regal race,
One monarch wears an open, honest face;
Shap'd to his size, and godlike to behold,
His royal body shines with specks of gold. Dryden's Virg.
Return'd with dire remorseless sway,
The monarch savage rends the trembling prey. Pope's Odyss.

and creditor.
What if you and I Nick should enquire how money matters stand between us? Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.
MO'NEYSERVENER. n. f. [money and servener.] One who raises money for others.
Suppose a young unexperienced man in the hands of money-serveners; such fellows are like your wire-drawing mills, if they get hold of a man's finger, they will pull in his whole body at last. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.
MO'NEYWORTH. n. f. A plant.
MO'NEYSWORTH. n. f. [money and worth.] Something value-able; something that will bring money.
There is either money or moneyworth in all the controversies of life; for we live in a mercenary world, and it is the price of all things in it. L'Estrange.
MO'NGCORN. n. f. [mang, Saxon, and corn.] Mixed corn:
as, wheat and rie.
MO'NGER. n. f. [mangepe, Saxon, a trader; from mangan, Saxon, to trade.] A dealer; a seller. It is used after the name of any commodity to express a seller of that commodity: as, a fishmonger; and sometimes a medler in any thing:
as, a whoremonger; a newsmonger.

MO'NGREL. adj. [as mangcorn, from mang, Saxon, or mengen, to mix, Dutch.] Of a mixed breed.
This zealot
Is of a mongrel, divers kind,
Clerick before, and lay behind. Hudibras, p. i.
Ye mongrel work of heav'n, with human shapess,
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mongrel mischievous. Dryden.
Bale.

MON

Base, groveling, worthless wretches;
Mongrels in faction; poor faint-hearted traitors. Addison.
 His friendship still to few confin'd,
 Were always of the middling kind;
 No fools of rank, or mongrel breed,
 Who fain would pass for lords indeed. Swift's Miscel.
MONIMENT. n. f. [from mones, Lat.] It seems here to signify inscription.

Some others were driven and diftent
 Into great ingots and to wedges square,
 Some in round plates withouten monument. Fairy Queen.
TO MONISH. v. a. [from mones, Lat.] To admonish, of which it is a contraction.

Monish him gently, which shall make him both willing to amend, and glad to go forward in love. Alcham's Schoolmaster.
MONISHER. n. f. [from monish.] An admonisher; a monitor.
MONITION. n. f. [from monitus, Latin; monition, Fr.]
 1. Information; hint.

We have no visible monition of the returns of any other periods, such as we have of the day, by successive light and darkness. Holder on Time.

2. Instruction; document.
 Unruly ambition is deaf, not only to the advice of friends, but to the counsels and monitions of reason itself. L'Estrange.

After sage monitions from his friends,
 His talents to employ for nobler ends,
 He turns to poltricks his dang'rous wit. Swift.

MONITOR. n. f. [Latin.] One who warns of faults, or informs of duty; one who gives useful hints. It is used of an upper scholar in a school commissioned by the master to look to the boys in his absence.

You need not be a monitor to the king; his learning is eminent: he but his scholar, and you are safe. Bacon.

It was the privilege of Adam innocent to have these notions also firm and untainted, to carry his monitor in his bosom, his law in his heart, and to have such a conscience as might be its own caufit. South's Sermons.

We can but divine who it is that speaks; whether Perilus himself, or his friend and monitor, or a third person. Dryden.
 The pains that come from the necessities of nature, are monitors to us to beware of greater mischiefs. Locke.

MONITORY. adj. [from monitoire, Fr. monitorius, Lat.] Conveying useful instruction; giving admonition.
 Losses, miscarriages, and disappointments, are monitory and instructive. L'Estrange's Fables.

He is so taken up still, in spite of the monitory hint in my essay, with particular men, that he neglects mankind. Pope.

MONITORY. n. f. Admonition; warning.
 A king of Hungary took a bishop in battle, and kept him prisoner; whereupon the pope writ a monitory to him, for that he had broken the privilege of holy church. Bacon.

MONK. n. f. [from monach, Latin; monachus, Fr.]
 One of a religious community bound by vows to certain observances.

I would prove the verity of certain words,
 Spoke by a holy monk. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Abdemeleck, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a melancholy Mahometan monk. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

The dromish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,
 Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
 And nestle in their ancient hives again. Rowe.

Monks, in some respects, agree with regulars, as in the substantial vows of religion; but in other respects, monks and regulars differ; for that regulars, vows excepted, are not tied up to so strict a rule of life as monks are. Ayliff's Parergon.

MONKEY. n. f. [from monikin, a little man.]
 1. An ape; a baboon; a jackanapes. An animal bearing some resemblance of man.

One of them shewed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey: Tubal, it was my turquoise; I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys. Shakespeare.

More new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey. Shakespeare. As you like it.

Other creatures, as well as monkeys, destroy their young ones by senseless fondness. Locke on Education.

With glittering gold and sparkling gems they shine,
 But apes and monkeys are the gods within. Granville.

2. A word of contempt, or slight kindness.
 This is the monkey's own giving out; she is persuaded I will marry her. Shakespeare's Othello.

Poor monkey! how wilt thou do for a father? Shakespeare.
MONKERY. n. f. [from monk.] The monastick life.

Neither do I meddle with their evangelical perfection of vows, nor the dangerous servitude of their rash and impotent votaries, nor the inconveniences of their monkery. Hall.

MONKHOOD. n. f. [from monk and hood.] The character of a monk.
 He had left off his monkhood too, and was no longer obliged to them. Atterbury.

MONKISH. adj. [from monk.] Monastick; pertaining to monks;
 taught by monks.

These public charities are a greater ornament to this city

MON

than all its wealth, and do more real honour to the reformed religion, than redounds to the church of Rome from all those monks and superstitious foundations of which the vainly boasts. Atterbury's Sermons.

Rise, rise, Roscommon, see the Blenheim mule,
 The dull constraint of monkish rhyme refuse. Smith.

MONK'S-HOOD. n. f. A plant.
MONK'S-RHUBARB. n. f. A species of dock: its roots are used in medicine. Ainsl.

MONOCHORD. n. f. [from μόνος and χορδή.]
 1. An instrument of one string: as, the trumpet marine. Har.

2. A kind of instrument anciently of singular use for the regulating of sounds: the ancients made use of it to determine the proportion of sounds to one another: when the chord was divided into two equal parts, so that the terms were as one to one, they called them unisons; but if they were as two to one, they called them octaves or diapasons; when they were as three to two, they called them fifths or diapentes;
 if they were as four to three, they called them fourths or diatesserons; if the terms were as five to four, they called it diton, or a tierce major; but if the terms were as six to five, then they called it a demi-diton, or a tierce minor; and lastly, if the terms were as twenty-four to twenty-five, they called it a demiton or dieze: the monochord being thus divided, was properly that which they called a system, of which there were many kinds, according to the different divisions of the monochord. Harris.

MONOCULAR. adj. [from μόνος and oculus.] One-eyed; having only one eye.

He was well served who, going to cut down an ancient white hawthorn tree, which, because the budded before others, might be an occasion of superstition, had some of the prickles flew into his eyes, and made him monocular. Hovell.

Those of China repute all the rest of the world monocular.
Glanville's Sup.

MONODY. n. f. [from μόνος and ᾠδή, Fr.] A poem sung by one person not in dialogue.

 scene in which a person of the drama speaks by himself; a soliloquy.

He gives you an account of himself, and of his returning from the country, in monologue; to which unnatural way of narration Terence is subject in all his plays. Dryden.

MONOMACHY. n. f. [from μόνος and μάχη.] A duel;
 a single combat.

MONOME. n. f. [from moneme, Fr.] In algebra, a quantity that has but one denomination or name; as, a, b, aab, aaab. Harris.

MONOPETALOUS. adv. [from μόνος and πέταλον.] Fr. monopétale.
 It is used for such flowers as are formed out of one leaf, how-soever they may be seemingly cut into many small ones, and those fall off together. Quincy.

MONOPOLIST. n. f. [from monopoleur, French.] One who by engrossing or patent obtains the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

TO MONOPOLIZE. v. a. [from μόνος and πωλείν; monopoler, Fr.]
 To have the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

He has such a prodigious trade, that if there is not some stop put, he will monopolize; nobody will sell a yard of drapery, or mercery ware, but himself. Atterbury.

MONOPOLY. n. f. [from μονοπωλία; monopole, Fr. monopole and πωλία.] The exclusive privilege of selling any thing.

Dost thou call me fool, boy?
 —All thy other things hast thou given away; that thou wast born with.

—Lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly on't they would have part on't. Shakespeare. King Lear.

One of the most oppressive monopolies imaginable; all others can concern only something without us, but this fat-tens upon our nature, yea upon our reason. Go. of the Tongue.

Shakespeare rather writ happily than knowingly and jolly;
 and Johnson, who by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, yet seemed to envy to posterity that knowledge, and to make a monopoly of his learning. Dryden's Jew.

MONOPROTE. n. f. [from μόνος and πρότερος.] Is a noun used only in some oblique case. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

 words of one syllable.

MONOSYLLABLE. n. f. [from monosyllabe, Fr. μόνος and σύλ-λαβή.] A word of only one syllable.

My name of Ptolemy!
 It is so long it asks an hour to write it:
 I'll change it into Jove or Mars!

Or any other civil monosyllable,
 That will not tire my hand. Dryden's Cleomenes.

These, although not insensible how much our language was already over-stocked with monosyllables, yet, to save time and pains, introduced that barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of their verses. Swift.

Monosyllable lines, unless artfully managed, are stiff or languishing; but may be beautiful to express melancholy. Pope.

MON

MONOSYLLABLED. adj. [from monosyllabe, Fr. from monosyllable.]
 Consisting of one syllable.

Nine taylor, if rightly spell'd,
 Into one man are monosyllabled. Cleaveland.

MONOTONY. n. f. [from μόνος and τόνος; monotonie, Fr.]
 Uniformity of sound; want of variety in cadence.

I could object to the repetition of the same rhymes within four lines of each other as tiresome to the ear through their monotony. Pope's Letters.

MONSIEUR. n. f. [French.] A term of reproach for a Frenchman.

A Frenchman his companion;
 An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves
 A Gallian girl. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

MONSIEUR. n. f. [from monseigneur, Fr.]
Monsieure are shifting trade winds in the East Indian ocean, which blow periodically; some for half a year one way, others but for three months, and then shift and blow for six or three months directly contrary. Harris.

The monsieure and trade winds are constant and periodical even to the thirtieth degree of latitude all around the globe, and seldom transgress or fall short of those bounds. Ray.

MONSTRE. n. f. [from monstre, Fr. monstrum, Latin.]
 1. Something out of the common order of nature.

It ought to be determined whether monsters be really a distinct species; we find, that some of these monstrous productions have none of those qualities that accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive. Locke.

2. Something horrible for deformity, wickedness, or mischief.
 If she live long,
 And, in the end, meet the old course of death,
 Women will all turn monsters. Shakespeare. King Lear.

All human virtue
 Finds envy never conquer'd but by death:
 The great Alcides ev'ry labour pass'd,
 Had still this monster to subdue at last. Pope.

TO MONSTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put out of the common order of things. Not in use.

Her offence
 Must be of such unnatural degree
 That monsters it. Shakespeare. King Lear.

I had rather have one scratch my head if th' sun,
 When the alarm were struck, than idly sit
 To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

MONSTRUITY. n. f. [from monstrous.] The state of being monstrous; or, out of the common order of the universe. Monstruity is more analogous.

This is the monstruity in love, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cressida.

Such a tacit league is against such routs and shoals of people, as have utterly degenerated from nature, as have in their very body and frame of estate a monstruity. Bacon.

We read of monstrous births, but we often see a greater monstruity in educations: thus, when a father has begot a man, he trains him up into a beast. South's Sermons.

By the same law monstruity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness the case of hermaphrodites. Arbutnot and Pope.

MONSTROUS. adj. [from monstreux, Fr. monstruosus, Latin.]
 1. Deviating from the stated order of nature.

Every thing that exists has its particular constitution; and yet some monstrous productions have few of those qualities which accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive their originals. Locke.

2. Strange; wonderful. Generally with some degree of dislike.

Is it not monstrous that this player here
 But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
 Could force his soul so to his conceit,
 That, from her workings, all his visage wan'd? Shakespeare.

O monstrous! but one halfpenny worth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack. Shakespeare.

3. Irregular; enormous.
 No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear,
 The whole at once is bold and regular. Pope.

 Has by one vessel sav'd his name from death. King.

MONTH. n. f. [from monas, Saxon.] A space of time either measured by the sun or moon: the lunar month is the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon comes to the same point: the solar month is the time in which the sun passes through a sign of the zodiac: the calendar months, by which we reckon time, are unequally of thirty or one-and-thirty days, except February, which is of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty-nine.

Till the expiration of your month,
 Sojourn with my sister. Shakespeare. King Lear.

From a month old even unto five years old. Lev. xxvii. 6.
Months are not only lunar, and measured by the moon, but also solar, and determined by the motion of the sun, in thirty degrees of the ecliptic. Brown's Vulgar Errors; b. iv.

As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
 So many years is the condemn'd by fate.
 To daily death. Dryden's Thea. and Honoria.

MONTH'S MIND. n. f. Longing desire.
 You have a month's mind to them. Shakespeare.

For if a trumpet sound, or drum beat,
 Who has not a month's mind to combat? Hudibras; p. i.

MONTHLY. adj. [from month.]

1. Continuing a month; performed in a month.
 I would ask concerning the monthly revolutions of the moon about the earth, or the diurnal ones of the earth upon its own axis, whether these have been finite or infinite. Bentley.

2. Happening every month.
 The youth of heav'nly birth I view'd,
 For whom our monthly victims are renew'd. Dryden.

MONTHLY. adv. Once in a month.
 If the one may very well monthly, the other may as well even daily, be iterated. Hooker; b. v.

O I wear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
 That changes monthly in her circl'd orb;
 Left that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakespeare.

 served; a memorial.

In his time there remained the monument of his tomb in the mountain Jafus. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

He is become a notable monument of unprosperous disloyalty. King Charles.

So many grateful altars I would rear
 Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
 Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
 Or monument to ages: and thereon Offer sweet-smelling gums. Milton's Par. Lost; b. xi.

Of ancient British art
 A pleasing monument, not less admir'd
 Than what from Attick or Etruscan hands Arose. Philips.

Collect the best monuments of our friends, their own images in their writings. Pope to Swift.

2. A tomb; a cenotaph; something erected in memory of the dead.

On your family's old monument
 Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
 That appertain unto a burial. Shakespeare.

The flowers which in the circling valley grow,
 Shall on his monument their odours throw. Sandys's Paraph.

In a heap of slain,
 Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress'd

Or wait inspiring dreams at Maro's urn. Pope's Miscel.
MONUMENTAL. adj. [from monument.] Memorial; preserving memory.
When the sun begins to fling
His flaming beams, me, goddess, bring
To arch'd walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown that Sylvan loves,
Of pine or monumental oak. Milton.
The destruction of the earth was the most monumental proof that could have been given to all the succeeding ages of mankind. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. ii.
The polish'd pillar different sculptures grace,
A work outlasting monumental brass. Pope.
2. Raised in honour of the dead; belonging to a tomb.
Perseverance keeps honour bright:
To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakespeare.
I'll not fear that whiter skin of her than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shakespeare. Othello.
Therefore if he needs must go,
And the fates will have it so,
Softly may he be posset
Of his monumental rest. Crashaw.
MOOD. n. f. [mode, Fr. modus, Latin.]
1. The form of an argument.
Mood is the regular determination of propositions according to their quantity and quality, i. e. their universal or particular affirmation or negation. Watts's Logic.
Aristotle reduced our loose reasonings to certain rules, and made them conclude in mode and figure. Baker on Learning.
2. State of musick.
They move
In perfect phalanx, to the Dorian mood
Of flutes, and soft recorders. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
Their found seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint. Milton.
3. The change the verb undergoes in some languages, as the Greek, Latin, and French, to signify various intentions of the mind, is called mood. Clarke's Lat. Grammar.
4. [From mod, Gothick; moos, Saxon; moed, Dutch; and generally in all Teutonic dialects.] Temper of mind; state of mind as affected by any passion; disposition,
The trembling ghosts, with sad amazed mood,
Chattering their iron teeth, and flaring wide
With stony eyes. Fairy Queen, b. i.
The kingly beast upon her gazing stood;
With pity calm'd, down fell his angry mood. Fairy Qu.
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare. Othello.
Clorinda changed to ruth her warlike mood,
Few silver drops her vermil cheeks depaint. Fairfax.
Solyman, in a melancholy mood, walked up and down in his tent a great part of the night. Knelles.
She was in fittest mood
For cutting corns, or letting blood. Hudibras, p. ii.
These two kids t' appease his angry mood
I bear, of which the furies give him good. Dryden.
He now profuse of tears,
In suppliant mood fell prostrate at our feet. Addison.
5. Anger; rage; heat of mind. Mod, in Gothick, signifies habitual temper.
That which we move for our better instruction's sake, turn-eth into anger and choler in them; yet in their mood they cast forth somewhat wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must rest contented. Hooker, b. v.
Mo'ony. adj. [from mood.]
1. Angry; out of humour.
How now, moody?
What is't thou canst demand?
Chide him rev'rently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth;
But being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Every peevish, moody malecontent
Shall set the senseless rabble in an uproar?
2. Mental; intellectual: moos in Saxon signifies the mind.
Give me some musick; musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.

Hlandick; maane, Danish; mane, German; maen, Dutch.]
1. The changing luminary of the night, called by poets Cynthia or Phoebe.
The moon shines bright: 'twas such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakespeare.
O swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Left that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakespeare.

MOO

Diana hath her name from moisture, which is the property of the moon, being by nature cold and moist, and is assigned to be a goddess huntress. Peacham.
Ye moon and stars bear witness to the truth!
2. A month.
3. [In fortification.] It is used in composition to denote a figure resembling a crescent: as, a half moon. Dryden.
MOON-BEAM. n. f. [moon and beam.] Rays of lunar light.
The division and quivering, which please so much in musick, have an agreement with the glittering of light, as the moon-beams playing upon a wave. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
On the water the moon-beams played, and made it appear like floating quicksilver. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.
MOON-CALF. n. f. [moon and calf.]

MOOSE. n. f. The large American deer; the biggest of the species of deer.
To Moor. v. a. [from mooring, moor, gemoor, meeting together,
Saxon, or perhaps, as it is a law term, from moor, French.]
To plead a mock cause; to state a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the Inns of court at appointed times.
MOOR case or point. A point or case unsettled and disputable, such as may properly afford a topic of disputation.
In this moor case your judgment to refuse
Is present death. Dryden's Juvenal.
Would you not think him crack'd, who would require another to make an argument on a moor point, who understands nothing of our laws?
Let us drop both our pretences; for I believe it is a moor point, whether I am more likely to make a master Bull, or you a master Strut. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
MOOTED. adj. Plucked up by the root. Ans.
MOOTER. n. f. [from moor.] A disputer of moot points.
Mop. n. f. [mōp; mappa, Latin.]
1. Pieces of cloth, or locks of wool, fixed to a long handle, with which maids clean the floors.
Such is that sprinkling which some careless quean
Flirts on you from her mop, but not to clean.
You fly, invoke the gods; then turning, stop
To rail; the singing fill whirls on her mop. Swift.
2. [Perhaps corrupted from mop.] A wry mouth made in contempt.
Each one, tripping on his toe,
Will be here with mop and moor. Shakespeare. Tempest.
To Mop. v. a. [from the noun.] To rub with a mop.
To Mop. v. n. [from mop.] To make wry mouths in contempt.
Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obdurate; Hobbitiden, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Mohu, of murder; and Fibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing, who since possesses chamber-maids. Shaksp.
An ass fell a mopping and braying at a lion. L'Estrange.
To MOPE. v. n. [Of this word I cannot find a probable etymology.] To be stupid; to drowse; to be in a constant daydream; to be spiritless, unactive and inattentive; to be stupid and delirious.

MOR

What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers. Shakespeare.
Eyes without feeling, feeling without light,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling fans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Ev'n in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither. Shakespeare. Tempest.
Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
Demoniack phrensy, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
The busy craftsman and o'erlabour'd hind,
Forget the travel of the day in sleep;
Care only wakes, and moping pensiveness;
With meagre discontented looks they sit,
And watch the wasting of the midnight taper. Rowe.
To MOPE. v. a. To make spiritless; to deprive of natural powers.
They say there are charms in herbs, said he, and so threw a handful of grass; which was so ridiculous, that the young thief took the old man to be moped. L'Estrange.
Severity breaks the mind; and then in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a low-spirited moped creature. Locke on Education.
MOPE-EYED. adj. Blind of one eye. Ans.
MO'PET. } n. f. [perhaps from mop.] A puppet made of rags, MO'PEY. } as a mop is made; a fondling name for a girl.

With a globe in one hand, and a sceptre in t'other?
A very pretty moppet! Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
MO'PUS. n. f. [A cant word from mope.] A drone; a dreamer.
I'm grown a mere mopus; no company comes
But a rabble of tenants. Swift's Miscel.
MORAL. adj. [moral, Fr. moralis, Latin.]
1. Relating to the practice of men towards each other, as it may be virtuous or criminal; good or bad.
Keep at the least within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. Hooker, b. ii.
Laws and ordinances positive he distinguisheth from the laws of the two tables, which were moral. Hooker, b. iii.
In moral actions divine law helpeth exceedingly the law of reason to guide man's life, but in supernatural it alone guideth.
Hooker, b. i.
Now, brandish'd weapons glitt'ring in their hands,
Mankind is broken loose from moral bands;
No rights of hospitality remain,
The guest, by him who harbour'd him, is slain. Dryden.
2. Reasoning or instructing with regard to vice and virtue.
France spreads his banners in our noiseless land,
With plumed helm thy fly'r begins his threats,
Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still and criest. Shaksp.
2. Popular; such as is known or admitted in the general business of life.
We have found it, with a moral certainty, the seat of the Mosaical abyss. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Mathematical things are capable of the strictest demonstration; conclusions in natural philosophy are capable of proof by an induction of experiments; things of a moral nature by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson's Sermons.
A moral universality, is when the predicate agrees to the greatest part of the particulars which are contained under the universal subject. Watts's Logic.
MORAL. n. f.
1. Morality; practice or doctrine of the duties of life: this is rather a French than English sense.
Their moral and economy,
Most perfectly they made agree. Prior.
2. The doctrine inculcated by a fiction; the accommodation of a fable to form the morals.
Get you some distill'd carduus benedictus, and lay it to your heart; it is the only thing for a quailm.
—Benedictus? why benedictus? you have some moral in this benedictus.
Moral! No, by my troth I have no moral meaning; I meant plain holy thistle. Shaksp. Much ado about nothing.
Left behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.
The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the ground-work of his instruction; this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden's Duffrenoy.
I found a moral first, and then studied for a fable, but could do nothing that pleased me. Swift to Gay.
To MORAL. v. n. [from the adjective.] To moralise; to make moral reflections.
When I did hear
The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,
That fools should be so deep contemplative. Shakespeare.
MORALIST.

MON

MORALIST. n. f. [moraliste, French.] One who teaches the duties of life.

The advice given by a great moralist to his friend was, that he should compose his passions; and let that be the work of reason, which would certainly be the work of time. Addison.

MORALITY. n. f. [moralité, Fr. from moral.]

1. The doctrine of the duties of life; ethics.
The system of morality, to be gathered out of the writings of ancient sages, falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Swift's Miscel.

A necessity of sinning is as impossible in morality, as any the greatest difficulty can be in nature. Baker on Learning.

2. The form of an action which makes it the subject of reward, or punishment.

The morality of an action is founded in the freedom of that principle, by virtue of which it is in the agent's power, having all things ready and requisite to the performance of an action, either to perform or not perform it. South's Sermons.

TO MORALIZE. v. a. [moraliser, French.]

1. To apply to moral purposes; to explain in a moral sense.

He 'as left me here behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

—I pray thee moralize them. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

Did he not moralize this spectacle? Shakespeare.

—O yes, into a thousand families. Shakespeare.

This fable is moralized in a common proverb. L'Estrange.

2. In Spenser it seems to mean, to furnish with manners or examples.

Fierce warres and faithful loves shall moralize my song. Fairy Queen, b. i.

3. In Prior, who imitates the foregoing line, it has a sense not easily discovered, if indeed it has any sense.

High as their trumpets tune his lyre he strung,
And with his prince's arms he moraliz'd his song. Prior.

TO MORALIZE. v. n. To speak or write on moral subjects.

MORALIZER. n. f. [from moralize.] He who moralizes.

MORALLY. adv. [from moral.]

1. In the ethical sense.

By good, good morally so called, bonum honestum, ought chiefly to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure, the bonum utile or jucundum, hardly come into any account here. South's Sermons.

Because this, of the two brothers killing each other, is an action morally unnatural; therefore, by way of preparation, the tragedy would have begun with heaven and earth in disorder, something physically unnatural. Rymer.

2. According to the rules of virtue.

To take away rewards and punishments, is only pleasing to a man who resolves not to live morally. Dryden.

3. Popularly; according to the common occurrences of life; according to the common judgment made of things.

It is morally impossible for an hypocrite to keep himself long upon his guard. L'Estrange.

The concurring accounts of many such witnesses render it morally, or, as we might speak, absolutely impossible that these things should be false. Athenian's Sermons.

MORALS. n. f. [without a singular.] The practice of the duties of life; behaviour with respect to others.

Some, as corrupt in their morals as vice could make them, have yet been solicitous to have their children soberly, virtuously, and piously brought up. South's Sermons.

Learn then what morals critics ought to shew:

'Tis not enough wit, art, and learning join;
In all you speak, let truth and candor shine. Pope.

MORA'SS. n. f. [marais, French.] Fen; bog; moor.

Landchapes point out the fairest and most fruitful spots, as well as the rocks, and wildernesses, and morasses of the country. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

 I mortally dislike a damning face. Granville.
MORTAR. n. f. [mortarium, Lat. mortier, Fr.]
 1. A strong vessel in which materials are broken by being pounded with a pestle.
 Except you could bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould
 it into a new paste, there is no possibility of an holy war.
 The action of the diaphragm and muscles serves for the comminution of the meat in the stomach by their constant agitation upwards and downwards, resembling the pounding of materials in a mortar. Ray on Creation.
 2. A short wide cannon out of which bombs are thrown.
 Those arms which for nine centuries had brav'd
 The wrath of time on antique stone engrav'd,
 Now torn by mortars stand yet undefac'd. Granville.
MORTAR. n. f. [mortier, Dutch; mortier, French.] Cement made of lime and sand with water, and used to join stones or bricks.
 Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and sand mixed up with water, serving as a cement, and used by masons and bricklayers in building of walls of stone and brick.
 Wolfius observes, that the sand should be dry and sharp, so as to prick the hands when rubbed, yet not earthy, so as to foul the water it is wash'd in: he also finds fault with masons and bricklayers as committing a great error, in letting their lime slacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and also in letting their mortar cool and die before they use it; therefore he advises, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not lie long before it be used.
 I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakefp. King Lear.
 They had brick for stone, and slime for mortar. Gen. xi. 3.
 Lime hot out of the kiln mixed soft with water, putting sand to it, will make better mortar than other. Mortimer.
MORTGAGE. n. f. [mort and gage, French.]
 1. A dead pledge; a thing put into the hands of a creditor.
 Th' estate runs out, and mortgages are made, Dryden.
 Their fortune ruin'd, and their fame betray'd,
 The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arbutnot.
 The broker,
 Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
 He seeks bye-streets, and faves th' expensive coach. Gay.
 2. The state of being pledged.
 The land is given in mortgage only, with full intention to be redeemed within one year. Bacon's Office of Alienation.
TO MORTGAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To pledge; to put to pledge; to make over to a creditor as a security.
 Let men contrive how they disentangle their mortgaged souls. Decay of Piety.

 all purchasers or mortgagees may be secured of all monies they lay out. Temple's Miscel.
MORTGAGER. n. f. [from mortgage.] He that gives a mortgage.
MORTIFEROUS. adj. [mortifer, Latin.] Fatal; deadly; destructive.
 What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's im-portunity, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from so dead, so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life. Hammond's Fundamentals.
 These murmuring, like a mortiferous herb, are poisonous even in their first spring. Government of the Tongue, f. 10.
MORTIFICATION. n. f. [mortification, Fr. from mortif.]
 1. The state of corrupting, or losing the vital qualities; gangrene.
 It appeareth in the gangrene, or mortification of flesh, either by opiates, or intense colds. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N.º. 333.
 My griefs ferment and rage,
 Nor less than wounds immedicable,
 Rattle and fester, and gangrene,
 To black mortification. Milton's Agonist. l. 617.
 2. Destruction of active qualities.
 Inquire what gives impediment to union or restitution, which is called mortification; as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine. Bacon's Physical Remains.
 3. The act of subduing the body by hardships and macerations.
 A diet of some fish is more rich and alkalescent than that of flesh, and therefore very improper for such as practise mortification. Arbutnot or Aliments.
 4. Humiliation; subjection of the passions.
 The mortification of our lusts has something in it that is troublesome, yet nothing that is unreasonable. Tillotson.
 5. Vexation; trouble.
 It is one of the most vexatious mortifications of a studious man, to have his thoughts disordered by a tedious visit.
 We had the mortification to lose the sight of Munich, Augburg, and Ratibon. Addison on Italy.
TO MORTIFY. v. a. [mortifier, French.]
 1. To destroy vital qualities.
 2. To destroy active powers, or essential qualities.
 What gives impediment to union or restitution is called mortification, as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine or pittle. Bacon.

 Oil of tartar per deliquium has a great faculty to find out and mortify acid spirits. Boyle.
 3. To subdue inordinate passions.
 The breath no sooner left his father's body,
 But that his wildness mortified in him,
 Seem'd to die too. Shakefp. Henry V.
 Their dear causes
 Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm Excite the mortified man. Shakefp. Macbeth.
 Suppress thy knowing pride,
 Mortify thy learned lust,
 Vain are thy thoughts, while thou thyself art dust. Prior.
 He modestly conjectures,
 His pupil might be tir'd with lectures,
 Which help'd to mortify his pride. Swift.
 4. To macerate or harass the body to compliance with the mind.
 We mortify ourselves with fish, and think we fare coarsely
 if we abstain from flesh. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Mortify'd he was to that degree,
 A poorer than himself he would not see. Dryden.
 5. To humble; to depress; to vex.
 Let my liver rather heat with wine,
 Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shakefp.
 He is controul'd by a nod, mortified by a frown, and transported by a smile. Addison's Guard. N.º. 113.
 How often is the ambitious man mortified with the very praises he receives, if they do not rise so high as he thinks they ought. Addison's Spect. N.º. 256.
TO MORTIFY. v. n.
 1. To gangrene; to corrupt.
 Try it with capon laid abroad, to see whether it will mortify and become tender sooner; or with dead flies with water cast upon them, to see whether it will putrefy. Bacon.
 2. To be subdued; to die away.
MORTISE. n. f. [mortaise, mortoise, Fr.] A hole cut into wood that another piece may be put into it and form a joint.
 A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
 If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
 What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
 Can hold the mortise. Shakefp. Othello.

MOS

Under one skin are parts variously mingled, some with cavities, as morfesses to receive, others with tenons to fit cavities. Ray.
TO MORTISE. v. a.
 1. To cut with a mortise; to join with a mortise.
 'Tis a mally wheel, gift left by a man at his death to his parish church, for the recompence of his personal tythes and offerings not duly paid in his life-time. Harris.

MOSAICK. adj. [mosaïque, French, supposed corrupted from mosaicus, Latin.]
 Mosaiick is a kind of painting in small pebbles, cockles, and shells of sundry colours; and of late days likewise with pieces of glass figured at pleasure; an ornament in truth, of much beauty, and long life, but of most use in pavements and floorings. Wotton's Architecture.
 Each beauteous flow'r,
 Iris all hues, roses, and jessamin,
 Rear'd high their flourish'd heads between, and wrought Mosaiick. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
 The most remarkable remnant of it is a very beautiful mo-saick pavement, the finest I have ever seen in marble; the parts are so well joined together, that the whole piece looks like a continued picture. Addison on Italy.
MOSCHATEL. n. f. [moschatellina, Lat.] A plant.
 The moschate bath a flower consisting of one leaf, which is divided at the brim into many parts, from whose cup arises the pointal, fixed like a nail in the middle of the flower, which becomes a soft succulent berry, in which are contained many flat seeds. Miller.
MOSQUE. n. f. [mosquée, French; moskit, Turkish.] A Mahometan temple.
MOSS. n. f. [muscus, Lat. meor, Saxon.] A plant.
 Though moss was formerly supposed to be only an excres-cence produced from the earth and trees, yet it is no less a perfect plant than those of greater magnitude, having roots, flowers, and seeds, yet cannot be propagated from seeds by any art: the botanists distinguish it into many species; it chiefly flourishes in cold countries, and in the winter season, and is many times very injurious to fruit trees: the only remedy in such cases, is to cut down part of the trees, and plough up the ground between those left remaining; and in the spring, in moist weather, you should with an iron instrument scrape off the moss. Miller.
 Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees; but it may be better sort'd as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.
 Houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
 With twining ozers fenc'd, and moss their beds. Dryden.
 Such mosses as grow upon walls, roofs of houses, and other high places, have seeds that, when shaken out of their vessels, appear like vapour or smoke. Ray on Creation.
 The cleft tree
 Offers its kind concealment to a few,
 Their food its insects, and its moss their nests. Thomson.
TO MOSS. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with moss.
 An oak whose boughs were moss'd with age,
 And high top bald with dry antiquity. Shakefp.
 Will these moss'd trees,
 That have out-liv'd the eagle page thy heels,
 And skip when thou point'st it out. Shakefp.
MOSSINESS. n. f. [from moss.] The state of being covered or overgrown with moss.
 The herbs withered at the top, sheweth the earth to be very cold, and so doth the mossiness of trees. Bacon.
MOSSY. adj. [from moss.] Overgrown with moss; covered with moss.

MOV

- But when no female arts his mind could move,
She turn'd to furious hate her impious love. Dryden's Ast.
What can thy mind to this long journey move,
Or need'st thou absence to renew thy love? Dryden.
4. To affect; to touch pathetically; to stir passion.
If he see aught in you that makes him like,
That any thing he fees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease translate it to my will. Shaksp. K. John.
It was great ignorance, Glosster's eyes being out,
To let him live; where he arrives he moves
All hearts against us. Shaksp. King Lear.
Should a shipwreck'd sailor sing his woe,
Would'st thou be mov'd to pity, or bestow
An alms? Dryden's Persius.
Images are very sparingly to be introduced; their proper place is in poems and orations, and their use is to move pity or terror, compassion and repentment. Felton on the Classics.
O let thy sister, daughter, handmaid, move
Or all those tender names. Pope.
5. To make angry.
From those bloody hands
Throw your distemper'd weapons to the ground,
And hear the sentence of your mov'd prince. Shaksp. Lear.
They have mov'd me to jealousy. Deut. xxxii. 21.
6. To put into commotion.
When they were come to Bethlehem, all the city was mov'd about them. Ruth i. 19.
7. To conduct regularly in motion.
They, as they move
Their starry dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years, tow'rd his all cheering lamp, Turn swift their various motions. Milton.
- To MOVE, v. n.
1. To go from one place to another.
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I lay a moving grove. Shaksp. Macbeth.
In him we live, move, and have our being. Acts xvii. 28.
Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you. Gen.
On the green bank I sat and listen'd long,
Nor till her lay was ended could I move,
But with'd to dwell for ever in the grove. Dryden.
The senses represent the earth as immovable; for though it do move in itself, it rests to us who are carried with it. Glan.
This saying, that God is the place of spirits, being literal, makes us conceive that spirits move up and down, and have their distances and intervals in God, as bodies have in space. Locke.
When we are come to the utmost extremity of body, what is there that can put a stop, and satisfy the mind, that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.
Any thing that moves round about in a circle in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move, but seems to be a perfect entire circle of that matter. Locke.
- The goddess moves
To visit Paphos, and her blooming groves. Pope's Odyssey.
2. To walk; to bear the body.
See great Marcellus! how inur'd in toils
He moves with manly grace, how rich with regal spoils. Dryden's En.
3. To go forward.
Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium. Dryden's En.
4. To change the posture of the body in ceremony.
When Haman saw Mordecai that he stood not up, nor moved for him, he was full of indignation. Ezra. v. 9.
- MOVABLE, adj. [from move.]
1. Capable of being moved; not fixed; portable; such as may be carried from place to place.
In the vast wilderness, when the people of God had no settled habitation, yet a moveable tabernacle they were commanded of God to make. Hooker, b. v.
When he made his prayer, he found the boat he was in movable and unbound, the rest remained still fast. Bacon.
Any heat whatsoever promotes the ascent of mineral matter, which is subtle, and is consequently moveable more easily. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. iv.
Any who sees the Teverone must conclude it to be one of the most moveable rivers in the world, that is so often shifted out of one channel into another. Addison on Italy.
2. Changing the time of the year.
The lunar month is natural and periodical, by which the moveable festivals of the Christian church are regulated. Held.
- MOVABLES, n. f. [meubles, Fr.] Goods; furniture; distinguished from real or immovable possessions: as, lands or house.
- We seize
The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables, Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possessor. Shaksp.

MOU

- Let him that moved you hither,
Remove you hence; I knew you at the first
You were a moveable. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.
—Why, what's a moveable?
—A joint stool. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.
Surveys rich moveables with curious eye,
Beats down the price, and threatens still to buy. Dryden.
- MOVABLENESS, n. f. [from moveable.] Mobility; possibility to be moved.
- MOVABLY, adv. [from moveable.] So as it may be moved.
His back-piece is composed of eighteen plates, moveably joined together by as many intermediate skins. Grew.
- MOVABLES, adj. Unmov'd; not to be put out of the place.
The lungs, though untouched, will remain moveables as to any expansion or contraction of their substance. Boyle.
The Grecian phalanx, moveable as a tow'r,
On all sides batter'd, yet refits his power. Pope's Iliad.
- MOVEMENT, n. f. [mouvement, French.]
1. Manner of moving.
What farther relieves descriptions of battles, is the art of introducing pathetic circumstances about the heroes, which raise a different movement in the mind, compassion and pity. Pope's Essay on Homer.
Under workmen are expert enough at making a single wheel in a clock, but are utterly ignorant how to adjust the several parts, or regulate the movement. Swift.
2. Motion.
MOVING, adj. [mouens, Latin.] Moving.
If it be in some part movens, and in some part quiescent, it must needs be a curve line, and so no radius. Grew's Col.
- MOVING, n. f. [mouens, Lat.] That which moves another.
That there is a motion which makes the vicissitudes of day and night, sense may assure us; but whether the sun or earth be the common movens, cannot be determined but by a further appeal. Clarville's Serp.
- MOVING, n. f. [from move.]
1. The person or thing that gives motion.
O thou eternal mover of the heav'ns,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
The strength of a spring were better assisted by the labour of some intelligent mover, as the heavenly orbs are supposed to be turned. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
2. Something that moves, or stands not still.
You as the soul, as the first mover, you Vigour and life on ev'ry part bestow. Waller.
So orbs from the first mover motion take,
Yet each their proper revolutions make. Dryden.
3. A propeller.
See here these movers, that do prize their honours
At a crack'd drachm; cushions, leaden spoons, Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
If any question be moved concerning the doctrine of the church of England express'd in the thirty-nine articles, give not the least ear to the movers thereof. Bacon.
- MOVING, participial adj. [from move.] Pathetic; touching;
adapted to affect the passions.
Great Jupiter,
The moving pray'r of Æacus did grant,
And into men and women turn'd the ant. Blackmore.
- MOVINGLY, adv. [from moving.] Pathetically; in such a manner as to seize the passions.
The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Psalms do both more briefly and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooker, b. v.
I would have had them writ more movingly. Shaksp.
His air, his voice, his looks, and honest soul,
Speak all so movingly in his behalf,
I dare not trust myself to hear him talk. Addison's Cato.
- MOUGHT, for might. Obsolete.
- MOULD, n. f. [mugel, Swedish.]
1. A kind of concretion on the top or outside of things kept, motionless and damp; now discovered by microscopes to be perfect plants.
All moulds are inceptions of putrefaction, as the moulds of pies and flesh, which moulds turn into worms. Bacon.
Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees, but may be better sort'd as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.
Another special affinity is between plants and mould, or pu-trefaction; for all putrefaction, if it dissolve not in arefaction, will, in the end, issue into plants. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The malt made in Summer is apt to contract mould. Mort.
A hermit, who has been shut up in his cell in a college, has contracted a sort of mould and rust upon his soul, and all his airs have awkwardness in them. Watts.
2. [Mole, Saxon.] Earth; soil; ground in which any thing grows.
Those moulds that are of a bright chefnut or hazelly colour are accounted the best; next to that, the dark grey and russet moulds are accounted best; the light and dark ash-colour are reckoned the worst, such as are usually found on common or heathy ground: the clear tawny is by no means to be approved, but that of a yellowish colour is reckoned the worst of all; this is commonly found in wild and waste parts of the country, and for the most part produces nothing but goss, furz, and fern. All good lands after rain, or breaking up by the spade, will emit a good smell; that being always the best that is neither too unctuous or too lean, but such as will easily dissolve; of a just consistence between fat and clay. Miller.
Though worms devour me, though I turn to mould,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold. Sandys's Paraph.
The black earth, every-where obvious on the surface of the ground, we call mould. Woodward.
3. Matter of which any thing is made.
When the world began,
One common mass compos'd the mould of man. Dryden.
Nature form'd me of her softest mould,
Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,
And sunk me even below my weak sex. Addison's Cato.
[Molds, Spanish; moule, French.] The matrix in which any thing is cast; in which any thing receives its form.
If the liturgies of all the ancient churches be compared,
it may be easily perceived they had all one original mould. Hooker, b. v.
A dangerous president were left for the casting of prayers into certain poetical moulds. Hooker, b. v.
French churches all cast according unto that mould which Calvin had made. Hooker.
My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould
Wherein this trunk was fram'd. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
New honours come upon him,
Like our strange garments cleave not to their mould,
But with the end of life. Shaksp. Macbeth.
You may have fruit in more accurate figures, according as you make the moulds. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 502.
- The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then what might else be wrought Futile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
We may hope for new heavens and a new earth, more pure and perfect than the former; as if this was a refiner's fire, to purge out the dross and coarse parts, and then cast the mass again into a new and better mould. Burnet.
Sure our souls were near allied, and thine
Cast in the same poetick mould with mine. Dryden.
Here in fit moulds to Indian nations known,
Are cast the several kinds of precious stone. Blackmore.
4. Cast; form.
No mates for you,
Unless you were of gentler, milder mould. Shaksp. Lear.
William earl of Pembroke was a man of another mould, and making, and of another fame, being the most universally belov'd of any man of that age; and, having a great office in the court, he made the court itself better esteem'd, and more reverenced in the country. Clarendon.
- Learn
What creatures there inhabit, of what mould,
Or substance, how endu'd, and what their pow'r,
And where their weakness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
So moulder the writer, whose productions should Take with the vulgar, be of vulgar mould. Waller.
From their main-top joyful news they hear
Of ships, which by their mould bring new supplies. Dryd.
Hans Carvel, impotent and old,
Married a lass of London mould. Prior.
5. The future or contexture of the skull.
To MOULD, v. a. [from the noun.] To contract concreted matter; to gather mould.
In woods, in waves, in wars she wants to dwell,
And will be found with peril and with pain;
Ne can the man that moulds in idle cell
Unto her happy mansion attain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
There be some houses wherein sweet meats will relent, and baked meats will mould, more than in others. Bacon.
- To MOULD, v. a. To cover with mould; to corrupt by mould.
Very coarse, hoary, moulded bread the soldiers thrust upon their spears, railing against Ferdinand, who made no better provision. Knales's Hist. of the Turks.
- To MOULD, v. a. [from the noun.] To model.
1. To form; to shape; to model.
I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Here is the cap your worship did bespeak;
Why this was moulded on a poringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
The king had taken such liking of his person, that he resolved to make him a master-piece, and to mould him plato-nically to his own idea. Watson's Buckingham.
Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay
To mould me man?
He forgeth and mouldeth metals, and builds houses. Hale.

- By the force of education we may mould the minds and manners of youth into what shape we please, and give them the impressions of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain.
Atterbury's Sermons.
- Then rose the seed of chaos, and of night,
Of dull and venal a new world to mould,
And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold. Dunciad, b. iv.
A faction in England, under the name of puritan, moulded up their new schemes of religion with republican principles in government. Swift.
- For you alone he stole
The fire that forms a manly soul;
Then, to compleat it ev'ry way,
He moulded it with female clay. Swift's Miscel.
Fabellus would never learn any moral lessons till they were moulded into the form of some fiction or fable like those of Æsop. Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i.
2. To knead: as, to mould bread.
MOVABLE, adj. [from mould.] What may be moulded.
The differences of figurative and not figurative, mouldable and not mouldable, are plebeian notions. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- MOULDER, n. f. [from mould.] He who moulds.
To MOULDER, v. n. [from mould.] To be turned to dust; to perish in dust; to be diminished.
If he had fat still, the enemies army would have moulder'd to nothing, and been expos'd to any advantage he would take. Clarendon, b. viii.
Whatsoever moulders, or is washed away, is carried down into the lower grounds, and nothing ever brought back again.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Those formed stones despoiled of their shells, and expos'd upon the surface of the ground, in time decay, wear, and moulder away, and are frequently found defaced, and broken to pieces. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. v.
- To them by smiling Jove 'twas giv'n, Great William's glories to recall,
When statues moulder, and when arches fall. Prior.
Finding his congregation moulder every Sunday, and hearing what was the occasion of it, he resolv'd to give his parish a little Latin in his turn. Addison's Spect. No. 221.
- To MOULDER, v. a. [from mould.] To turn to dust; to crumble.
The natural histories of Switzerland talk of the fall of those rocks when their foundations have been moulder'd with age, or rent by an earthquake. Addison on Italy.
With nodding arches, broken temples spread,
The very tombs now vanish'd like their dead;
Some felt the silent stroke of mould'ring age,
Some, hostile fury. Pope.
- MOULDINESS, n. f. [from mouldy.] The state of being mouldy.
Flesh, fish, and plants, after a mouldiness, rottenness, or

MOUNT. n. f. [mont, French; mons, Latin.]
1. A mountain; a hill.
Jacob offered sacrifice upon the mount. Gen. xxxi. 54.
Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounds of snow. Dryden.
2. An artificial hill raised in a garden, or other place.
He might see what mounds they had in short time cast, and what a number there was of brave and warlike soldiers.
Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
3. A public treasure; a bank. Now obsolete.
These examples confirm'd me in a resolution to spend my time wholly in writing; and to put forth that poor talent God hath given me, not to particular exchanges, but to banks or mounds of perpetuity, which will not break. Bacon.
TO MOUNT. v. n. [monter, French.]
1. To rise on high.
Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high? Job iii. 27.
I'll strive, with troubl'd thoughts, to take a nap;
Left leaden slumber poize me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory. Shakespeare.
A base ignoble mind,
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shakespeare.
The fire of trees and houses mounts on high,
And meets half-way new fires that show'r from sky. Cowley.
If the liturgy should be offered to them, it would kindle jealousy, and as the first range of that ladder which should serve to mount over all their customs. Clarendon.
Ambitious meteors set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun; not considering, that they have no more time allowed them in their mounting than the single revolution of a day; and that when the light goes from them, they are of necessity to fall. Dryd.
2. To tower; to be built up to great elevation.
Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish. Job xx. 6.

Make fair deductions, see to what they mount. Pope.
TO MOUNT. v. a.
1. To raise aloft; to lift on high.
The fire that mounts the liquor till 't runs o'er,
Seeming to augment, wastes it. Shakespeare.
What power is it which mounts my love so high,
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye? Shakespeare.
The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by. Ral.
2. To ascend; to climb.
Shall we mount again the rural throne,
And rule the country kingdoms, once our own? Dryden.
3. To place on horseback.
Three hundred horses, in high stables fed,
Of these he chose the fairest and the best,
To mount the Trojan troop. Dryden's En.
Clear reason, acting in conjunction with a well-disciplined, but strong and vigorous fancy, seldom fail to attain their end:
fancy without reason, is like a horse without a rider; and reason without fancy is not well mounted. Grew's Cos. b. ii.
4. To embellish with ornaments.
5. TO MOUNT guard. To do duty and watch at any particular post.

for the more easy carriage and management in firing it.
MOUNTAIN. n. f. [montagne, French.] A large hill; a vast protuberance of the earth.
I had been drowned; a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man, and what a thing should I have been when I had been swelled? I should have been a mountain of mummy.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe,
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where fits deformity to mock my body. Shakespeare.

MOU

From Acmon's hands a rolling-stone there came,
So large, it half deferv'd a mountain's name! Dryden.
MOUNTAIN. adj. [montanus, Latin.] Found on the mountains; pertaining to the mountains; growing on the mountains.
Now for our mountain sport, up to yond hill,
Your legs are young. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fittet with the gusts of heav'n. Shakespeare.
MOUNTAINEER. n. f. [from mountain.]
1. An inhabitant of the mountains.
A few mountaineers may escape, enough to continue human race; and yet illiterate rufficks, as mountaineers always are.
Bentley's Sermons.
Amitemian troops, of mighty fame,
And mountaineers, that from Severus came. Dryden's En.
2. A savage; a free booter; a ruffick.
Yield, ruffick mountaineer. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
No savage, fierce banditti, or mountaineer,
Will dare to foil her virgin purity. Milton.

mount. Elegant, but not in use.
Her breasts sweetly rose up like two fair mountainets in the pleasant vale of Tempe. Sidney.
MOUNTAINOUS. adj. [from mountain.]
1. Hilly; full of mountains.
The ascent of the land from the sea to the foot of the mountains, and the height of the mountains from the bottom to the top, are to be computed, when you measure the height of a mountain, or of a mountainous land, in respect of the sea. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. Large as mountains; huge; bulky.
What custom wills in all things, shou'd we do't,
Mountainous error wou'd be too highly heapt
For truth to o'erpeer. Shakespeare.
On earth, in air, amidst the seas and skies,
Mountainous heaps of wonders rise;
Whole tow'ring strength will ne'er submit
To reason's batteries, or the mines of wit. Prior.
3. Inhabiting mountains.
In destructions by deluge and earthquake, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant and mountainous people, that can give no account of the time past. Bacon's Essays.

Brerewood on Learning.
MOUNTAIN-PARSLEY. n. f. [oreoselinum, Lat.] A plant.
The mountain-parsley hath a rose-shaped umbellated flower, consisting of several leaves, placed in a circular order, resting on the empanclement, which afterwards becomes a fruit composed of two seeds, which are oval, plain, large, streaked and bordered, and sometimes cast off their cover; the leaves are like parsley. Miller.
MOUNTAIN-ROSE. n. f. [schamærhododendron, Lat.] A plant.
The mountain-rose hath a tubulose flower, consisting of one leaf, shaped somewhat like a funnel; from whose cup arises the point, fixed like a nail in the hinder part of the flower, which afterwards becomes an oblong fruit, divided into five cells, in which are contained many very small seeds. Miller.
MOUNTANT. adj. [montans, Lat.] Rising on high.
Hold up, you flouts,
Your aprons mountant; you're not oastable,
Although, I know, you'll swear. Shak. Timon of Athens.
MOUNTBANK. n. f. [montare in banco, Italian.]
1. A docter that mounts a bench in the market, and boasts his infallible remedies and cures.
I bought an unction of a mountebank
So mortal, that but dip a knife in it,
Where it draws blood, no cataplasm so rare,
Can save the thing from death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
She, like a mountebank, did wound
And stab herself with doubts profound,
Only to shew with how small pain
The foies of faith are cur'd again. Hudibras, p. i.
But Æschylus, says Horace in some page, Dryden.
Was the first mountebank that trod the stage.
It looks so like a mountebank to boast of infallible cures.
Baker's Reflections on Learning.
2. Any boastful and false pretender.
As nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.
There are mountebanks, and snatterers in state. L'Estrange.
Nothing so impossible in nature but mountebanks will undertake. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

 Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty. Shakespeare.
 Her garments, heavy with their drink,
 Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
 To muddy death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 Carry it among the whiffers in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch close by the Thames. Shakespeare.
 Who can a pure and crystal current bring
 From such a muddy and polluted spring? Sandys's Paraph.
 I strove in vain th' infected blood to cure,
 Streams will run muddy where the spring's impure. Roscom.
 Till by the fury of the storm full blown,
 The muddy bottom o'er the clouds is thrown. Dryden.
 Out of the true fountains of science painters and statuary are bound to draw, without amusing themselves with dipping in streams which are often muddy, at least troubled; I mean the manner of their masters after whom they creep. Dryden.
 2. Impure; dark; gross.
 There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdest,
 But in his motion like an angel tings,
 Still quiring to the young ey'd cherubims;
 Such harmony is in immortal sounds;
 But whilst this muddy vesture of decay
 Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it. Shakespeare.
 If you chuse, for the composition of such ointment, such ingredients as do make the spirits a little more gross or muddy, thereby the imagination will fix the better. Bacon.
 2. A bird so called. Ans.
 3. Soiled with mud.
 His passengers
 Expos'd in muddy weeds, upon the miry shore. Dryden.

MUMMY. n. f. [from mumie, Fr. mumia, Lat. derived by Salmafus from animum, by Bartoli from the Arabic.]

1. A dead body preserved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two different substances preserved for medicinal use under the name of mummy: one is the dried flesh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and spice; the other is the liquor running from such mummies when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damps: this is sometimes of a liquid, sometimes of a solid form, as it is preserved in vials well stopp'd, or suffered to dry and harden in the air: the first kind is brought to us in large pieces, of a lax and friable texture, light and puffy, of a blackish brown colour, and often black and clammy on the surface; it is of a strong but not agreeable smell: the second sort, in its liquid state, is a thick, opaque, and viscous fluid, of a blackish and a strong, but not disagreeable smell: in its indurated state it is a dry, solid substance, of a fine shining black colour and close texture, easily broken, and of a good smell: this sort is extremely dear, and the first sort to cheap, that as all kinds of mummy are brought from Egypt we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggists are supplied with is the flesh of executed criminals, or of any other bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen so plentiful in that part of the world, and adding aloes, and some other cheap ingredients, send them to be baked in an oven till the juices are exhaled, and the embalming matter has penetrated so thoroughly that the flesh will keep. Mummy has been esteemed resolvent and balsamick; and besides it, the skull, and even the most growing on the skulls of human skeletons, have been celebrated for antiepileptick virtues; the fat also of the human body has been recommended in rheumatisms, and every other part or humour have been in repute for the cure of some disease: at present we are wise enough to know, that the virtues ascribed to the parts of the human body are all either imaginary, or such as may be found in other animal substances: the mummy and the skull alone of all these horrid medicines retain their places in the shops. Hill's Mat. Med.

The silk

Was dy'd in mummy, which the skilful Conser'v'd of maidens hearts. Shakespeare's Othello.

It is strange how long carcases have continued uncorrupt, as appeareth in the mummies of Egypt, having lasted some of them three thousand years. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 771.

Sav'd by spice, like mummies, many a year, Old bodies of philosophy appear. Dunciad, b. i.

2. Mummy is used among gardeners for a sort of wax used in the planting and grafting of trees. Chambers.

3. To beat to a MUMMY. To beat soundly. Ains.

To MUMPS. v. a. [from mumpelen, Dutch.]

1. To nibble; to bite quick; to chew with a continued motion.

Let him not pry nor listen, Nor frisk about the houle

 MUSCLE. n. f. [muscle, Fr. musculus, Lat. muscula, Sax.]
 Muscle is a bundle of thin and parallel plates of fleshy threads or fibres, inclosed by one common membrane: all the fibres of the same plate are parallel to one another, and tied together at extremely little distances by short and transverse fibres: the fleshy fibres are composed of other smaller fibres, inclosed likewise by a common membrane: each lesser fibre consists of very small vesicles or bladders, into which we suppose the veins, arteries and nerves to open, for every muscle receives branches of all those vessels, which must be distributed to every fibre: the two ends of each muscle or the extremities of the fibres are, in the limbs of animals, fastened to two bones, the one moveable, the other fixed; and therefore, when the muscles contract, they draw the moveable bone according to the direction of their fibres. Quincy.
 The instruments of motion are the muscles, the fibres whereof, contracting themselves, move the several parts of the body. Locke.
 2. A bivalve shell-fish.

MUSHROOM. n. f. [mushroom, French.]
 1. Mushrooms are by curious naturalists esteemed perfect plants, though their flowers and feeds have not as yet been discovered:
 the true champion or mushroom appears at first of a roundish form like a button, the upper part of which, as also the stalk, is very white, but being opened, the under part is of a livid flesh colour, but the fleshy part, when broken, is very white;
 when they are suffered to remain undisturbed, they will grow to a large size, and explicate themselves almost to a flatness, and the red part underneath will change to a dark colour:
 in order to cultivate them, open the ground about the roots of the mushrooms, where you will find the earth very often full of small white knobs, which are the off-sets or young mushrooms;
 these should be carefully gathered, preserving them in lumps with the earth about them, and planted in hot beds. Miller.
 2. An upstart; a wretch risen from the dunghill; a director of a company.
 Mushrooms come up in a night, and yet they are unfown;
 and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms. Bacon's Natural History.

 Where noble youth at vast expence is taught,
 But eloquence not valu'd at a groat. Dryden's Juvenal.
 2. Instrumental or vocal harmony.
 When the spake,
 Sweet words, like dropping honey, she did shed;
 And 'twixt the pearls and rubies softly brake
 A silver sound, that heavenly musick seem'd to make. F. Qu.
 Such musick
 Before was never made,
 But when of old the sons of morning sung. Milton.
 By musick minds an equal temper know,
 Nor swell too high, nor sink too low;
 Warriors the fires with animated sounds,
 Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.
 We have dancing-masters and musick-masters. Arb. and Pope.
MUSICAL. adj. [musical, Fr. from musick.]
 1. Harmonious; melodious; sweet sounding.
 The merry birds
 Chanted above their cheerful harmony,
 And made amongst themselves a sweet consort,
 That quicken'd the dull spirit with musical comfort. F. Qu.
 Sweet bird that thunn't the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholly;
 Thee chauntrests oft the wood among,
 I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.
 Neither is it enough to give his author's sense, in poetical expressions and in musical numbers. Dryden.
 2. Belonging to musick.
 Several musical instruments are to be seen in the hands of Apollo's muses, which might give great light to the dispute between the ancient and modern music. Addison.

MUSICIAN. n. f. [musicus, Lat. musicien, Fr.] One skilled in harmony; one who performs upon instruments of musick.
 Though the musicians that shall play to you,
 Hand in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
 Yet strait they shall be here. Shakefp. Henry IV.
 The nightingale, if the should sing by day,
 When every goose is cackling, would be thought
 No better a musician than the wren. Shakefp.
 A painter may make a better face than ever was; but he must do it by a kind of felicity, as a musician that maketh an excellent air in musick, and not by rule. Bacon's Essays.

MUS

- The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung;
 Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young. Dryden.
MUSK. n. f. [muschio, Italian; mus, Fr.]
Musk is a dry, light and friable substance of a dark blackish colour, with some tinge of a purplish or blood colour in it, feeling somewhat smooth or unctuous; its smell is highly perfumed, and too strong to be agreeable in any large quantity:
 its taste is bitterish; it is brought from the East Indies, mostly from the kingdom of Bantam, some from Tonquin and Cochin China: the animal which produces it is of a very singular kind, not agreeing with any established genus: it is of the size of a common goat but taller; its head resembles that of the greyhound, and its ears stand erect like those of the rabbit: its tail is also erect and short, its legs moderately long, and its hoofs deeply cloven: its hair is a dusky brown, variegated with a faint cast of red and white, every hair being part-coloured: the bag which contains the musk, is three inches long and two wide, and situated in the lower part of the creature's belly; it consists of a thin membrane covered thinly with hair, resembling a small purse, and when genuine, the scent is so strong as to offend the head greatly: toward the orifice of the bag there are several glands, which serve for the secretion of this precious perfume, for the sake of which the Indians kill the animal. Hill.
 Some putrefactions and excrements yield excellent odours;
 as civet and musk. Bacon's Natural History.
MUSK. n. f. [musca, Lat.] Grape hyacinth or grape flower.
Musk hath a bulbous shoot; the leaves are full and narrow; the flower is hermaphrodite, consisting of one leaf, and shaped like a pitcher, and cut at the top into six segments, which are reflexed; the ovary becomes a triangular fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of round seeds. Miller.

 gun of a large bore. Dia.
MUSKINESS. n. f. [from musk.] The scent of musk.
MUSKME'LO'N. n. f. [musk and melon.] A fragrant melon.
 The way of maturation of tobacco must be from the heat of the earth or sun; we see some leading of this in muskmelons, which are sown upon a hot bed danged below, upon a bank turned upon the South sun. Bacon.
MUSKPEAR. n. f. [musk and pear.] A fragrant pear.
MUSKROSE. n. f. [musk and rose.] A rose so called, I suppose, from its fragrance.
 In May and June come roses of all kinds, except the musk, which comes later. Bacon's Essays.
 Thyris, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
 The huddling brook to hear his madrigal, Milton.
 And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Boyle.
 The muskrose will, if a lusty plant, bear flowers in Autumn without cutting.
MUSKX. adj. [from musk.] Fragrant; sweet of scent.

 —I do.
 —Then must the Jew be merciful.
 —On what compulsion must I? tell me that. Shakespeare.
Must I needs bring thy son unto the land from whence thou camest?
 Fade, flowers, fade, nature will have it so;
 'Tis but what we must in our Autumn do. Waller.
 Because the same self-existent being necessarily is what he is, 'tis evident that what he may be, or hath the power of being, he must be. Grew.
 Every father and brother of the convent has a voice in the election, which must be confirmed by the pope. Addison.
MUST. n. f. [mustum, Latin.] New wine; new wort.
 If in the must of wine, or wort of beer, before it be tunned, the burrage stay a small time, and be often changed, it makes a sovereign drink for melancholy. Bacon's Natural History.
 As a swarm of flies in vintage time,
 About the wine-press where sweet must is pour'd,
 Beat off, returns as oft with humming found. Milton.
 The wine itself was suiting to the rest,
 Still working in the must, and lately press'd. Dryden.

 beards, save only their mustaches, which they wear long. Spens.
MUSTARD. n. f. [mustard, Welsh; mustard, Fr.] A plant.
 The flower consists of four leaves, which are placed in form of a cross, out of whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a fruit or pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides, and are filled with roundish seeds: these pods generally end in a fungous horn, containing the like seeds. To these marks must be added, an acrid burning taste, peculiar to mustard. Miller.
 The pancakes were naught, and the mustard was good. Shak.
 Sauce like himself, offensive to its foes,
 The rough mustard, dangerous to the nose. King.
Mustard, taken in great quantities, would quickly bring the blood into an alkaline state, and destroy the animal.
Arbuthnot.
 'Tis your's to shake the foul,
 With thunder rumbling from the mustard bowl. Pope.
 Stick your candle in a bottle, a coffee cup, or a mustard
 pot. Swift.
 Common mustard seed is attenuant and resolvent: it warms the stomach, and excites appetite; but its principal medicinal use is external in sinapisms. Hill's Mat. Med.
TO MUSTER. v. n. To assemble in order to form an army.
 Why does my blood thus muster to my heart,

As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. Shak. Winter's Tale.
The bear, the boar, and every savage name,
Wild in effect, though in appearance tame,
Lay waste thy woods, destroy thy blissful bow'r,
And muzzled though they seem, the mutes devour. Dryden.
Through the town with slow and solemn air,
Led by the nostril, walks the muzzled bear. Gay's Past.
2. To fondle with the mouth close. A low word.
The nurse was then muzzling and coaxing of the child.
My pronoun possessive. [See MINE.] Belonging to me. My is used before a substantive, and mine anciently and properly before a vowel. My is now commonly used indifferently before mine when it goes before: as, this is my book; this book is mine.
Her feet she in my neck doth place.
I conclude my reply with the words of a Christian poet. Spenser.
If my soul had free election
To dispose of her affection.
I shall present my reader with a journal. Waller.
MYNCHEN. n. f. [myncpen, Saxon.] A nun. Addison.
MYOGRAPHY. n. f. [μυογραφία.] A description of the muscles. Diels.
MYOLOGY. n. f. [myologie, French.] The description and doctrine of the muscles.

MYS

To instance in all the particulars, were to write a whole system of myology. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.
MYOPY. n. f. Shortness of sight.
MYRIAD. n. f. [μύριας.]
1. The number of ten thousand.
2. Proverbially any great number.
Assemble thou,
Of all those myriads, which we lead, the chief. Milton.
Are there legions of devils who are continually designing and working our ruin? there are also myriads of good angels who are more cheerful and officious to do us good. Tillotson.
Safe sits the goddess in her dark retreat;
Around her, myriads of ideas wait,
And endless shapes. Prior.
MYRMIDON. n. f. [μυρμιδών.] Any rude ruffian; so named from the soldiers of Achilles.
The mafs of the people will not endure to be governed by Clodius and Curio, at the head of their myrmidons, though these be ever so numerous, and compos'd of their own representatives. Swift.
MYROBALAN. n. f. [myrobalanus, Latin.] A fruit.
The myrobalans are a dried fruit, of which we have five kinds: they are fleshy, generally with a stone and kernel, having the pulpy part more or less of an austere acrid taste: they are the production of five different trees growing in the East Indies, where they are eaten preserved: they serve also for making and for dressing leather: they have been long in great esteem for their quality of opening the bowels in a gentle manner, and afterwards strengthening them by their astringency; but the present practice rejects them all. Hill.
The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures; for it is sweet, and yet astringent. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 644.
MYROPOLIST. n. f. [μύρον and πωλις.] One who sells unguents.
MYRRH. n. f. [myrrha, Latin; myrrhe, Fr.] A gum.
Myrrh is a vegetable product of the gum resin kind, sent to us in loose granules from the size of a pepper corn to that of a walnut, of a reddish brown colour, with more or less of an admixture of yellow: its taste is bitter and acrid, with a peculiar aromatick flavour, but very nauseous: its smell is strong, but not disagreeable: it is brought from Ethiopia, but the tree which produces it is wholly unknown. Our myrrh is the very drug known by the ancients under the same name: internally applied it is a powerful resolvent, and externally applied it is discutient and vulnerary. Hill's M. Med.
The myrrh sweet bleeding in the bitter wound. Spenser.
I dropt in a little honey of roses, with a few drops of tincture of myrrh. Wifeman's Surgery.
MYRRHINE. adj. [myrrhinus, Latin.] Made of the myrrhine stone.
How they quaff in gold,
Crystal and myrrhine cups imboid'd with gems
And studs of pearl. Milton's Par. Reg. b. iv.
MYRTIFORM. n. f. [myrtus and form.] Having the shape of myrtle.
MYRTLE. n. f. [myrtus, Latin; myrte, Fr.] A fragrant tree sacred to Venus.
The flower of the myrtle consists of several leaves disposed in a circular order, which expand in form of a rose; upon the top of the foot-stalk is the ovary, which has a short star-like cup, divided at the top into five parts, and expanded; the ovary becomes an oblong umbilicated fruit, and divided into three cells, which are full of kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.
There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle
Imbroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.
I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the morn dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea. Shakespeare.
Democritus would have Concord like a fair virgin, holding in one hand a pomegranate, in the other a bundle of myrtle; for such is the nature of these trees, that if they be planted though a good space one from the other, they will meet, and with twining one embrace the other. Peachment.
Nor can the myrtle the gallant Sidney pass
The plume of war! with early lawrels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle and the poet's bay. Thomson's Summer.
MYSELF. n. f. [my and self.]
1. An emphatical word added to I: as, I myself do it; that is, not I by proxy; not another.
As his host,
Not bear the knife myself. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
2. The reciprocal of I in the oblique case.
They have missed another pain, against which I should have been at a loss to defend myself. Swift's Examiner.
MYSTAGOGUE. n. f. [μυσταγωγός; mystagogus, Latin.] One who interprets divine mysteries; also one who keeps church relics, and shews them to strangers. Bailey.
MYSTERIC. n. f. [μυστήριον and αρχή.] One presiding over mysteries.

MYSTERIOUS.

M Y S

MYSTÉRIOUS. adj. [mysterieux, French, from mystery.]
1. Inaccessible to the understanding; awfully obscure.
God at last

To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd, Though in mysterious terms. Milton's Par. Lost. b. x.
Then the true Son of knowledge first appear'd,
And the old dark mysterious clouds were clear'd. Denham.

2. Artfully perplexed.
Those princes who were most distinguished for their mysterious skill in government, found, by the event, that they had ill consulted their own quiet, or the happiness of their people. Swift's Thoughts on the State of Affairs.

MYSTÉRIOUSLY. adv. [from mysterious.]
1. In a manner above understanding.

2. Obscurely; enigmatically.
Our duty of preparation contained in this one word, try or examine, being after the manner of mysteries, mysteriously and secretly described, there is reason to believe that there is in it very much duty. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
Each stair mysteriously was meant. Milton.

MYSTÉRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from mysterious.]
1. Holy obscurity.

My purpose is, to gather together into an union all those several portions of truth, and differing apprehensions of mysteriousness. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

2. Artful difficulty or perplexity.

To MYSTÉRISE. v. a. [from mystery.] To explain as enigmas.
Mystérizing their enigmas, they make the particular ones of the twelve tribes accommodable unto the twelve signs of the zodiac. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

MYSTERY. n. f. [μυστήριον; mysterion, Fr.]

1. Something above human intelligence; something awfully obscure.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Upon holy days, let the matter of your meditations be according to the mystery of the day; and to your ordinary devotions of every day, add the prayer which is fitted to the mystery. Taylor.

If God should please to reveal unto us this great mystery of the trinity, or some other mysteries in our holy religion, we should not be able to understand them, unless he would bestow on us some new faculties of the mind. Swift's Sermon.

2. An enigma; any thing artfully made difficult.
To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter. Shak. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
Important truths still let your fables hold,
And moral mysteries with art unfold. Granville.

3. A trade; a calling: in this sense it should, according to Warburton, be written mystery, from mystère, French, a trade.
And that which is the noblest mystery,
Brings to reproach and common infamy. Hobbes's Tale.

M Y T

Instruction, manners, mysteries and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakespeare.

MYSTICAL. adj. [mysticus, Latin.]

1. Sacredly obscure.

Let God himself that made me, let not man that knows not himself, be my instructor concerning the mystical way to heaven. Hooker, b. i.
From salvation all flesh being excluded this way, God hath revealed a way mystical and supernatural. Hooker, b. i.

2. Involving some secret meaning; emblematical.

Ye five other wand'ring fires! that move
In mystick dance not without song, refund
His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light. Milton.
It is Christ's body in the sacrament and out of it; but in the sacrament not the natural truth, but the spiritual and mystical. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

It is plain from the Apocalypse, that mystical Babylon is to be confuted by fire. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Obscure; secret.

Left new fears disturb the happy state,
Know, I have search'd the mystick rolls of fate. Dryden.
MYSTICALLY. adv. [from mystical.] In a manner, or by an act, implying some secret meaning.

These two in thy sacred bosom hold,
Till mystically join'd but one they be. Dante.
MYSTICALNESS. n. f. [from mystical.] Involvement of some secret meaning.

MYTHOLOGICAL. adj. [from mythology.] Relating to the explanation of fabulous history.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and by tradition stole into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense and morality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MYTHOLOGICALLY. adv. [from mythological.] In a manner suitable to the system of fables.

MYTHOLOGIST. n. f. [from mythology.] A relator or expounder of the ancient fables of the heathens.

The grammarians and mythologists seem to be altogether unacquainted with his writings. Cruick.
It was a celebrated problem among ancient mythologists, What was the strongest thing, what the wisest, and what the greatest? Norris's Miscell.

To MYTHOLOGIZE. v. n. [from mythology.] To relate or explain the fabulous history of the heathens.

MYTHOLOGY. n. f. [μυθολογία and λόγος; mythologia, French.] System of fables; explication of the fabulous history of the gods of the heathen world.

The modesty of mythology deserves to be commended: the scenes there are laid at a distance; it is once upon a time, in the days of yore, and in the land of Utopia. Bentley.

My nails can reach unto thine eyes. Shakespeare.
The meanest sculptor in th' Emilian square,
Can imitate in brass, the nails and hair;
Expert in trifles. Dryden.

The nails of our fingers give strength to those parts in the various functions they are put to; and defend the numerous nerves and tendons that are under them. Ray.

2. The talons of birds and beasts.
3. A spike of metal by which things are fastened together.
As one nail by strength drives out another;
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object soon forgotten. Shakespeare.

For the body of the ships, no nation doth equal England, nor for the oaken timber to build them; and we need not borrow iron for spikes or nails, to fasten them together. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

The load-stone mines in the shore of India, are so placed in abundance and vigor, that it proves an adventure of hazard to pass those coasts in a ship with iron nails. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 3.

A beechen pail
Hung by the handle, on a driven nail.
An equivocal word used for the nail of the hand or foot, and for an iron nail to fasten any thing. Dryden.

4. A Stud; a bolt.
5. A kind of measure; two inches and a quarter.
6. On the nail. Readily; immediately; without delay. I suppose from a counter fludded with nails.
We want our money on the nail,
The banker's ruin'd if he pays. Swift's Poems.

To NAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with nails.
To the cross he nails thy enemies,
The law that is against thee, and the sins
Of all mankind, with him are crucify'd. Milton's P. Lost.
He clasp'd his hand upon the wounded part.
The second shaft came swift and unespied,
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his hide. Dryden.

2. To stud with nails.
In golden armour glorious to behold,
The rivets of your arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.
A nail-maker.
NAILER. n. f. [from nail.] One whose trade is to forge nails;

NAKED. adj. [nacobs, Saxon.]

1. Wanting cloaths; uncovered; bare.

He pitying how they rood
Before him naked to the air, that now

N A M

Must suffer change;
As father of his family, he clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts. Milton, P. Lost.
Ungrateful men,
Behold my bosom naked to your swords;
And let the man that's injur'd strike the blow. Addison.

2. Unarmed; defenceless; unprovided.
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

3. Plain; evident; not hidden.
The truth appears so naked on my side;
That any purblind eye may find it out. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

4. Mere; bare; wanting the necessary additions; simple; abstracted.
Not that God doth require nothing unto happiness at the hands of men, saving only a naked belief, for hope and charity we may not exclude; but that without belief all other things are as nothing, and it is the ground of those other divine virtues. Hooker, b. i. p. 37.

NAKEDLY. adv.
1. Without covering.

2. Simply; merely; barely; in the abstract.
Though several single letters nakedly considered, are found to be articulations only of spirit or breath, and not of breath vocalized; yet there is that property in all letters of breath, to be conjoined in syllables. Holder.

3. Discoverably; evidently.
So blinds the sharpest counsels of the wise
This overshadowing Providence on high,
And dazzleth all their clearest sighted eyes,
That they see not how nakedly they lie. Daniel Civil War.

NAKEDNESS. n. f. [from naked.]

1. Nudity; want of covering.
My face I'll grime with filth;
And with prebent nakedness out-face
The winds and persecutions of the sky. Shak. K. Lear.
Nor he their outward only, with the skins
Of beasts; but inward nakedness, much more Opprobrious! with his robe of righteousness
Arrayings, cover'd from his father's sight. Milton.

I entreat my gentle readers to slow off their tuckers again, and not to imitate the nakedness, but the innocence of their mother Eve. Addison's Guard. N. 100.

Thou to be strong must put off every drel;
Thy only armour is thy nakedness. Prior.

2. Want of provision for defence.
Spies, to see the nakedness of the land are come. Gen. xlii. 9.

3. Plainness; evidence; want of concealment.
Why seek'st thou to cover with excuse
That which appears in proper nakedness? Shakespeare's Twelfth.

NALL. n. f. An awl, such as collar-makers use.
Whole bridle and saddle, whitelather and nall,
With collars and harness. Trifler's Husb.

NAME. n. f. [nama, Saxon; naem, Dutch; anum, Erse.]

1. The discriminative appellation of an individual.
What is thy name?
Thou'lt be afraid to hear it:
No: though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.
My name's Macbeth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He called their names after the names his father had called them. Gen. xxvi. 18.

I know thee by name.
2. The term by which any kind or species is distinguished.
What's in a name? That which we call a rose,
By any other name would smell as sweet.
If every particular idea that we take in, should have a distinct name, names must be endless. Locke.

3. Person.
They list with women each degen'rate name,
Who dares not hazard life for future fame. Dryden.

4. Reputation; character.

NAM

- The king's army was the last enemy the west had been acquainted with, and had left no good name behind.
Clarendon, b. viii.
5. Renown; fame; celebrity; eminence; praise; remembrance; memory; distinction; honour.
What men of name resort to him?
Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;
And Rice ap Thomas with a valiant crew,
And many others of great name and worth.
Visit eminent persons of great name abroad; to tell how the life agreeth with the fame.
Bacon's Essays, N^o. 19.
Here rest thy bones in rich Hesperia's plains,
Thy name, 'tis all a ghost can have, remains.
Dryden.
A hundred knights
Approv'd in fight, and men of mighty name.
Dryden.
These shall be towns of mighty fame,
Tho' now they lie obscure, and lands without a name.
Dryden, Æn. vi.
Bartolus is of great name; whose authority is as much valued amongst the modern lawyers, as Papinian's was among the ancients.
Baker's Reflect. on Learning.
6. Power delegated; imputed character.
In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
7. Fictitious imputation.
When Ulysses with fallacious arts,
Had forg'd a treason in my patron's name,
My kinsman fell.
Dryden, Æn.
8. Appearance; not reality; assumed character.
I'll to him again, in the name of Brook;
He'll tell me all his purpose.
Shakespeare, IV. of Windsor.
There is a friend which is only a friend in name.
Ecclus. xxxvii.
9. An opprobrious appellation.
Bids her confess; calls her ten thousand names;
In vain she kneels.
Granville's Poems.
Like the watermen of Thames
I row by, and call them names.
Swift's Miscel.
- TO NAME, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To discriminate by a particular appellation.
I mention here a son of the king's whom Florizel
I now name to you; and with speed to pace
To speak of Perdita.
Shakespeare's Win. Tale.

Let my name be named on them.
Gen. xlviii. 16.
- NAMELESS, adj. [from name.]
1. Not distinguished by any discriminative appellation.
On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing.
Denham.
The milky way,
Fram'd of many nameless stars.
Waller.
Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
And sacred, place by Dryden's awful dust;
Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes.
Pope.
2. One of which the name is not known or mentioned.
Little credit is due to accusations of this kind, when they come from suspected, that is, from nameless pens.
Atterbury's Sermons.
- NAMELY, adv. [from name.] Particularly; specially; to mention by name.
It can be to nature no injury, that of her we say the same which diligent beholders of her works have observed; namely, that the provideth for all living creatures nourishment which may suffice.
Hooker, b. iii. f. 4.
Which of these sorrows is he subject to?
To none of these, except it be the last;
Namely, some love that drew him off from home.
Shakespeare.
The council making remonstrances unto queen Elizabeth, of the continual conspiracies against her life; and namely, that a man was lately taken, who stood ready in a very dangerous and suspicious manner to do the deed; advised her to go less abroad weakly attended. But the queen answered, that she had rather be dead, than put in custody.
Bacon, Apophth. 14.
For the excellency of the soul, namely, its power of divining in dreams; that several such divinations have been made, none can question.
Addison's Spectator.

NAP

- Solomon's choice does not only instruct us in that point of history, but furnishes out a very fine moral to us; namely, that he who applies his heart to wisdom, does at the same time take the most proper method for gaining long life, riches, and reputation.
Addison's Guardian.
- NAP, n. f. [name.] One who calls or knows any by name.
NAPLESS, n. f. One that has the same name with another.
Nor does the dog fish at sea, much more make out the dog of land, than that his cognominal, or namesake in the heavens.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
One author is a mole to another: it is impossible for them to discover beauties; they have eyes only for blemishes:
they can indeed see the light, as is said of their namesakes;
but immediately shut their eyes.
Addison's Spectator.
- NAP, n. f. [nappean, Saxon, to sleep.]
1. Slumber; a short sleep.
Mopla sat frowning of sleep with open mouth making such a noise, as no body could lay the sleeping of a nap to her charge.
Sidney, b. ii.
Let your bounty
Take a nap, and I will awake it anon.
Shakespeare.
The sun had long since in the lap
Of Thetis, taken out his nap.
Hudibras, p. ii.
So long as I'm at the forge you are still taking your nap.
L'Estrange, Fab.
2. [nappean, Saxon.] Down; villous substance.
Amongst those leaves the made a butterfly
With excellent device and wondrous flight;
The velvet nap, which on his wings doth lie,
The silken down, with which his back is dight.
Spenser.
Jack Cade the clothier, means to dress the Commonwealth, and set a new nap upon it.
Shakespeare.
Plants, though they have no prickles, have a kind of downy or velvet rind upon their leaves; which down or nap cometh of a subtil spirit, in a soft or fat substance.
Bacon.
Ah! where must needy poet seek for aid
When dust and rain at once his coat invade;
His only coat! where dust confus'd with rain
Roughens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain.
Swift.
- TO NAP, v. a. [nappean, Saxon.] To sleep; to be drowsy or secure.
They took him napping in his bed.
Hudibras, p. i.
A wolf took a dog napping at his master's door.
L'Estrange.
What is seriously related by Helmont, that soul linen, stopt in a vessel that hath wheat in it, will in twenty-one days time turn the wheat into mice; without conjuring, one may guess to have been the philosophy and information of some housewife, who had not so carefully covered her wheat, but that the mice could come at it, and were there taken napping, just when they had made an end of their good cheer.
Bentley's Sermons.
- NAP-TAKING, n. f. [nap and take.] Surprise; seizure on a sudden; unexpected onset, like that made on men asleep.
Napping, assaults, spoiling, and firings, have in our fore-father's days, between us and France, been very common.
Carew.
- NAPE, n. f. [Of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it to come from nap, the hair that grows on it; Junius, with his usual Greek sagacity, from ναπ, a hill; perhaps from the same root with knob.] The joint of the neck behind.
Turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves.
Shakespeare.
Domitian dreamed, the night before he was slain, that a golden head was growing out of the nape of his neck.
Bacon.
- NAPERY, n. f. [naperia, Italian.] Table-linen.
NAPHEW, n. f. [napus, Lat.] An herb.
NAPHTHA, n. f. [naphtha, Latin.] An herb.
Naphtha is a very pure, clear, and thin mineral fluid, of a very pale yellow, with a cast of brown in it. It is soft and oily to the touch, of a sharp and unpleasing taste, and of a brisk and penetrating smell; of the bituminous kind. It is extremely ready to take fire, and in places where it is frequent, it exhales a vapour that takes fire at the approach of any flame, and burns to a great distance, sometimes spreading in an instant over half a mile or more of ground, and continuing alight a great while. It is found floating on the waters of fountains. It is principally used externally in para-lytick cases, and in pains of the limbs.
Hill's Mat. Med.
Strabo represents it as a liquation of bitumen. It swims on the top of the water of wells and fountains. That found about Babylon is in some springs whitish, tho' it be generally black, and differs little from Petroleum.
Woodward.
- NAP-PINESS, n. f. [nappy.] The quality of having a nap.
NAPKIN, n. f. [from nap; which etymology is oddly favoured by Virgil, Tossique ferunt mantilia villis; naperia, Italian.]
1. Cloaths used at table to wipe the hands.
By art were weaved nappins, shirts, and coats, inconsumptible by fire.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The same matter was woven into a napkin at Louvain, which was cleaned by being burnt in the fire.
Wilkins.
Napkins, Helioabalus had of cloth of gold, but they were most commonly of linnen, or soft wool.
Arbutnot.

NAR

2. A hankerchief. Obsolete. This sense is retained in Scotland.
I am glad I have found this naphin;
This was her first remembrance from the moor.
Shakespeare.
NAPLESS, adj. [from nap.] Wanting nap; threadbare.
Were he to stand for conful, ne'er would he Appear in th' market place, nor on him put
The napless vesture of humility.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
NAPPY, adj. [from nap.] Mr. Lye derives it from nappe, Saxon, a cup.] Frothy; spumy; from nap; whence apples and ale are called lamb's wool.
When I my thresher heard,
With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd.
Gay's Poet.
NARCISSUS, n. f. [Latin; narcissus, Fr.] A daffodil.
Nor Narcissus fair
As o'er the fabled mountain hanging fill.
Thomson.
NARCISSUS, adj. [narcissus, narcotique, Fr.] Producing torpor, or stupefaction.
Narcotick includes all that part of the materia medica, which any way produces sleep, whether called by this name, or hypnoticks, or opiates.
The ancients esteemed it narcotick or stupefactive, and it is to be found in the list of poisons by Dioscorides.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.
- NARD, n. f. [nardus, Lat. νάρδος, Gr.]
1. Spikenard; a kind of ointment.
2. An odorous shrub.
Smelt o' the bud o' the briar,
Or the nard in the fire.
Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.
He now is come
Into the blissful field, thro' groves of myrrh,
And flowing odours, cassia, nard and balm.
Milton.
- NARE, n. f. [naris, Latin.] A nostril not used, except as in lated.

NARRATE, v. a. [narro, Latin.] To relate; to tell; a word only used in Scotland.
NARRATION, n. f. [narratio, Latin; narration, Fr.] Account; relation; history.
He did doubt of the truth of that narration.
Atterbury.
They that desire to look into the narrations of the story, for the variety of the matter we have been careful might have profit.
2 Mac. ii. 24.
Homer introduces the best instructions, in the midst of the plainest narrations.
Notes on the Odyssey.
- NARRATIVE, adj. [narrativus, Fr. from narro, Lat.]
1. Relating; giving an account.
The words of all judicial acts are written narratively, unless it be in sentences dispositive and enacting; therefore credit ought to be given to these acts, though the words be narrative.
Ayliffe's Pervogen.
2. Storytelling; apt to relate things past.
Age, as Davenant says, is always narrative.
Dryden.
The poor, the rich, the valiant and the sage,
And boasting youth, and narrative old age.
Pope.
- NARRATIVE, n. f. A relation; an account; a story.
In the instructions I here give to others, concerning what they should do, take a narrative of what you have done.
South's Sermons.

to turn either to the right hand or to the left.
Numb. ii. 26.
In a narrow-bottom'd ditch cattle cannot turn themselves.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. Small; of no great extent.
From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a smallness in the exclusion; but this inferreth no infirmity.
Brown.

NAR

3. Covetous; avaritious.
To narrow breasts he comes all wrapt in gain,
To swelling hearts he shines in honour's fire.
Sidney.
4. Contracted; of confined sentiments; ungenerous.
Nothing more shakes any society than mean divisions between the several orders of its members, and their narrow-hearted repining at each other's gain.
Sprat's Sermon.
The greatest understanding is narrow. How much of God and nature is there, whereof we never had any idea?
Grew, Cosmol. b. ii. c. 8.
The hopes of receiving good from those whom we gratify, would produce but a very narrow and stinted charity.
Smallridge's Sermons.
A salamander grows familiar with a stranger at first sight, and is not so narrow-spirited as to observe, whether the person she talks to, be in breeches or in petticoats.
Addison.
It is with narrow-fould people as with narrow-neck'd bottles; the less they have in them the more noise they make in pouring it out.
Swift's Miscellanies.
5. Near; within a small distance.
Then Mnestheus to the head his arrow drove,
But made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;
Yet miss'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd by the foot the fitting bird.
Dryden.
6. Close; vigilant; attentive.
The orb he roam'd
With narrow search; and with inspection deep Consider'd ev'ry creature, which of all
Most opportune might serve his wiles.
Milt. Par. Left.
Many malicious spies are searching into the actions of a great man, who is not always the best prepared for so narrow an inspection.
Addison's Spectator, N^o. 265.
- TO NARROW, v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To diminish with respect to breadth or wideness.
In the wall he made narrow'd rests, that the beams should not be fastened in the walls of the house.
1 Kings vi. 6.
By reason of the great Continent of Brasilia, the needle deflecteth toward the land twelve degrees; but at the Straits of Magellan, where the land is narrow'd, and the sea on the other side, it varieth about five or six.
Brown's Vulg. Err.
A government, which by alienating the affections, losing the opinions, and crossing the interests of the people, leaves out of its compass the greatest part of their consent, may justly be said, in the same degrees it loses ground, to narrow its bottom.
Temple's Miscel.
2. To contract; to impair in dignity of extent or influence.
One science is incomparably above all the rest, where it is not by corruption narrow'd into a trade, for mean or ill ends, and secular interests; I mean, theology, which contains the knowledge of God and his creatures.
Locke's Works.
3. To contract in sentiment or capacity of knowledge.
Defect does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things in which we are conversant.
Government of the Tongue.
How hard it is to get the mind, narrow'd by a scanty collection of common ideas, to enlarge itself to a more copious stock.
Locke's Works.
Lo! ev'ry finish'd son returns to thee!
Bounded by nature, narrow'd still by art,
A trifling head, and a contracted heart.
Pope's Dunci. b. iv.
4. To confine; to limit.
By admitting too many things at once into one question, the mind is dazzled and bewildered; whereas by limiting and narrowing the question, you take a fuller survey of the whole.
Watts's Logic.
Our knowledge is much more narrow'd, if we confine ourselves to our own solitary reasonings, without much reading.
Watts.
5. [In farriery.] A horse is said to narrow, when he does not take ground enough, and does not bear far enough out to the one hand or to the other.
Farr. Dict.

NAT

NARROWNESS. n. f. [from narrow.]
 1. Want of breadth or wideness.
 In our Gothic cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, or run out in length. Addison on Italy.
 2. Want of extent; want of comprehension.
 That prince, who should be so wise and godlike, as by established laws of liberty to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind, against the oppression of power, and narrowness of party, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke's Works.
 3. Confined state; contractedness.
 The most learned and ingenious society in Europe, confesses the narrowness of human attainments. Glauv. Scept.
 Cheap vulgar arts, whose narrowness affords
 No flight for thoughts, but poorly sticks at words. Denham.
 The Latin, a most severe and compendious language, often expresses that in one word, which either the barbarity or the narrowness of modern tongues cannot supply in more. Dryden.
 4. Meanness; poverty.
 If God will fit thee for this passage, by taking off thy load, and emptying thy bags, and so suit the narrowness of thy fortune to the narrowness of the way thou art to pass, is there any thing but mercy in all this? South's Sermons.
 5. Want of capacity.
 Another disposition in men, which makes them improper for philosophical contemplations, is not so much from the narrowness of their spirit and understanding, as because they will not take time to extend them. Burn. Theo. of the Earth.
NAS. [from ne has, or has nas.]
 For pity'd is misap'd that nas remedy,
 But scorn'd been deeds of fond foolery. Spenser.

NAV

well as of all the naval stores that furnish the world. Temple.
NAVE. n. f. [nap, Saxon.]

1. The middle part of the wheel in which the axle moves.
 Out, out, thou flumpet fortune! all you gods
 In general synod take away her power;
 Break all the spokes and fellows from her wheel,
 And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n,
 As low as to the fiends. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

In the wheels of waggons the hollows of the naves, by their swift rotations on the ends of the axle-trees, produce a heat sometimes so intense as to set them on fire. Ray.
 2. [From navis, nave, old Fr.] The middle part of the church distinct from the aisles or wings.

It comprehends the nave or body of the church, together with the chancel. Ayliffe's Par.

1. The point in the middle of the belly, by which embryos communicate with the parent.

The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments.

As children, while within the womb they live,
 Fed by the navel: here they feed not so. Davies.

There is a superintending Providence, that some animals will hunt for the teat before they are quite gotten out of the secundines and parted from the navelstring. Derham.

2. The middle; the interior part.

Being prest to the war,
 Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
 They would not thread the gates. Shakespeare's Cor.

Within the navel of this hideous wood,
 Immur'd in cypre's shades, a forerunner dwells. Milton.

NAVELGALL. n. f.

Navelgall is a bruise on the top of the chine of the back, behind the saddle, right against the navel, occasioned either by the saddle being split behind, or the stuffing being wanting, or by the crupper buckle fitting down in that place, or some hard weight or knobs lying directly behind the saddle.

NAVELWORT. n. f.

It hath the appearance of housebeck; from which it differs only in having an oblong tubulous flower of one leaf, divided at the top into five parts. This plant is used in medicine, and grows wild upon old walls. Miller.

NAVEW. n. f. [napus, Lat. navet, navew, Fr.]

It agrees in most respects with the turnep; but has a lesser root, and somewhat warmer in taste. The species are three. In the Isle of Ely the third species, which is wild, is very much cultivated, it being the cole seed from which they draw the oil. Miller.

NAUGHT. adj. [naht, naht, Saxon; that is, ne aught, not any thing.] Bad; corrupt; worthless.

With them that are able to put a difference between things naught and things indifferent in the church of Rome, we are yet at controversy about the manner of removing that which is naught. Hooker, b. iv.

Thy fitter's naught: Oh Regan! she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here. Shakespeare.

NAUGHT. n. f. Nothing. This is commonly, though improperly, written naught. See NAUGHT and UGHT.

NAUGHTINESS. n. f. [from naughty.] Wickedness; badness.

Slight wickedness or parveituty, as of children.

No remembrance of naughtiness delights but mine own;
 and methinks the accusing his traps might in some manner excuse my fault, which certainly I loth to do. Sidney, b. ii.

NAUGHTY. adj. [See NAUGHT.]

1. Bad; wicked; corrupt.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney, b. ii.

These naughty times

Put bars between the owners and their rights. Shakespeare.

How far that little candle throws his beams!
 So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shakespeare.

2. It is now seldom used but in ludicrous censure.

If gentle flumbers on thy temples creep,
 But naughty man, thou dost not mean to sleep,
 Betake thee to thy bed. Dryden.

NAVICULAR. adj. [navicularis, Lat. naviculaire, Fr.] In anatomy, the third bone in each foot that lies between the astragalus and ossa cuneiformia. Diét.

NAVIGABLE. adj. [navigabilis, Fr. navigabilis, Latin.] Capable of being passed by ships or boats.

The first-peopled cities were all founded upon these navigable rivers, or their branches, by which the one might give succour to the other. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Almighty Jove surveys
 Earth, air, and shores, and navigable seas. Dryden.

NAU

NAVIGABLENESS. n. f. [from navigable.] Capacity to be passed in vessels.

The Phoenicians navigated to the extremities of the western ocean. Arbutnot on Cains.

To NAVIGATE. v. a. To pass by ships or boats.

Drusus, the father of the emperor Claudius, was the first who navigated the northern ocean. Arbutnot on Cains.

NAVIGATION. n. f. [navigation, Fr. from navigare.]

1. The act or practice of passing by water.

Our shipping for number, strength, mariners, pilots, and all things that appertain to navigation, is as great as ever.

The loadstone is that great help to navigation. Bacon.

Rude as their ships, was navigation then,
 No useful compass or meridian known;
 Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,
 And knew no north but when the polestar shone. Dryden.

When Pliny names the Pæni as inventors of navigation, it must be understood of the Phœnicians, from whom the Carthaginians are descended. Arbutnot on Cains.

2. Vessels of navigation.

Thou'ntie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches, tho' the yesty waves
 Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakespeare's Mac.

NAVIGATOR. n. f. [navigateur, Fr. from navigare.] Sailor;
 seaman; traveller by water.

By the founding of navigators, that sea is not three hundred and sixty foot deep. Brown's V. Err.

The rules of navigators must often fail. Brown's V. Err.

The contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds, tides, and the sight of the heavens. Wilkin's Math. Magic.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only a globe in speculation, has since been surrounded by the boldness of many navigators. Temple.

NAVLAGE. n. f. [navium, Lat.] The freight of passengers in a ship.

NAUMACHY. n. f. [naumachie, Fr. naumachia, Latin.] A mock sea fight.

To NAUSEATE. v. n. [from nausen, Latin.] To grow loqueam; to turn away with disgust.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and nauseate, and grow tired of a particular subject before you have finished it. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

To NAUSEATE. v. a.

1. To loath; to reject with disgust.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems arbitrary; for many are cryed up in one age, which are decayed and nauseated in another. Brown's V. Err.

Old age, with silent pace, comes creeping on,
Nauses the praise, which in her youth she won,
 And hates the muse by which she was undone. Dryden.

Those heads, as stomachs, are not free the best,
 Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest. Pope.

2. To strike with disgust.

He let go his hold and turned from her, as if he were nauseated, then gave her a lash with his tail. Swift.

NAUSEOUS. adj. [from nausea, Latin; nauseos, Fr.] Loath-some; disgusting; regarded with abhorrence.

Those trifles wherein children take delight,
 Grow nauseous to the young man's appetite.
 And from those gaieties our youth requires
 To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

Food of a wholesome juice is pleasant to the taste and agreeable to the stomach, 'till hunger and thirst be well appeased, and then it begins to be less pleasant, and at last even nauseous and loathsome. Ray.

Old thread-bare phrases will often make you go out of your way to find and apply them, and are nauseous to rational hearers. Swift.

NAUSEOUSLY. adv. [from nauseous.] Loathsomely; disgustfully.

This, though cunningly concealed, as well knowing how nauseously that drug would go down in a lawful monarchy, which was prescribed for a rebellious commonwealth, yet they always kept in reserve. Dryden.

Their satire's praise;
 So nauseously and so unlike they paint. Garth's Disp.

NAUSEOUSNESS. n. f. [from nauseous.] Loathsome; quality of raising disgust.

The nauseousness of such company disgusts a reasonable man, when he sees he can hardly approach greatness but as a moated castle; he must first pass through the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden's Aeneid.

NAUTICAL. adj. [nauticus, Latin.] Pertaining to sailors.

NAUTICK. adj. [nauticus, Latin.] Pertaining to sailors.

He elegantly shewed by whom he was drawn, which de-painted the nautical compass with aut magnos, aut magna. Can.

NAUTILUS. n. f. [Latin; nautilus, Fr.] A shell fish furnished with something analogous to oars and a sail. Learn.

 Spread the thin oar and catch the driving gale. Pope.

NAVY. n. f. [from navis, Lat.] An assembly of ships, commonly ships of war; a fleet.

On the western coast rideth a puissant navy. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

Levy money, and return the fame to the treasurer of the navy for his majesty's use. Clarendon.

The narrow seas can scarce their navy bear;
 Or crowded vessels can their soldiers hold. Dryden.

NAV. adv. [na, Saxon, or ne eye.]

1. No; an adverb of negation.

Disputes in wrangling spend the day,
 Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay. Denham.

2. Not only so but more. A word of amplification.

A good man always profits by his endeavour, yea, when he is absent; nay, when dead, by his example and memory;
 so good authors in their stile. Ben. Johnson's Discov.

This is then the ally of Ovid's writings, which is sufficiently recompensed by his other excellencies; nay, this very fault is not without its beauties; for the most severe censor cannot but be pleased. Dryden.

If a son should strike his father, not only the criminal but his whole family would be rooted out, nay, the inhabitants of the place where he lived, would be put to the sword, nay, the place itself would be razed. Addis. Spect. N. 189.

3. Word of refusal.

They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out. Acts xvi. 37.

The fox made several excuses, but the flock would not be laid nay; so that at last he promised him to come. L'Estrange's Fable 31.

He that will not when he may,
 When he would he shall have nay. Prov.

NAVWORD. n. f. [nav and word.]

1. The side of denial; the saying nay.

You would believe my saying,
 How'er you lean to th' navword. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

2. A proverbial reproach; a bye word.

If I do not gull him into a navword, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

3. A watchword. Not in use.

I have spoke with her; and we have a navword how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry mum;
 by the cries budget; and by that we know one another. Shakespeare.

NE. adv. [Saxon.] This particle was formerly of very frequent use, both singly and by contraction in compound words; as, will for ne will or will not; nae for ne has or has not; nis for ne is or is not. Neither; and not.

His warlike shield all cover'd closely was,
 Ne might of mortal eye be ever seen,
 Not made of steel, nor of enduring brass. Fairy Qu.

NEAP. n. f. [neap, Islandick.] A fift. It is retained in Scotland; and in the plural neapes.

Give me thy neap, Monsieur Mustardseed. Shakespeare.

To NEAL. v. a. [nealan, Saxon; to kindle.] To temper by a gradual and regulated heat.

The workmen let it cool by degrees in such relents of fire, as they call their nealing heats; lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air in the room of fire.

This did happen for want of the glasses being gradually cooled or nealed. Digby on Bodies.

If you file, engrave, or punch upon your steel, neal it first, because it will make it softer, and consequently work easier. The common way is to give it a blood-red heat in the fire, then let it cool of itself. Maxon's Mech. Exer.

To NEAL. v. n. To be tempered in fire.

Reduction is chiefly effected by fire, wherein if they stand and neal, the imperfect metals vapour away. Bacon.

NEAP. adj. [neeplos, Saxon; neap, poor.] Low; decrescient. Used only of the tide, and therefore sometimes used substantively.

The mother of waters, the great deep, hath lost nothing of her ancient bounds. Her motion of ebbing and flowing, of high springs and dead neaps, are as constant as the changes of the moon. Hakewill on Providence.

How doth the sea constantly observe its ebbs and flows, its springs and neap-tides, and still retain its saltness, so convenient for the maintenance of its inhabitants. Ray.

NEAR. prep. [nep, Saxon; naer, Dutch and Scottish.] At no great distance from; close to; nigh.

I have heard these say,
 No grief did ever come to near thy heart,
 As when thy lady and thy true love died. Shakespeare.

Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give,
 As one near death to those that with him live. Shakespeare.

With blood the dear alliance shall be bought,
 And both the people near destruction brought. Dryden.

He serv'd great Hector, and was ever near. Dryden's Æn.

Not with his trumpet only, but his spear. Dryden's Æn.

3. Within a little.

Self-pleasing and humourous minds are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Bacon's Essays, N. 8.

This eagle shall go near, one time or other, to take you for a hare. L'Estrange's Fable 107.

He that paid a bushel of wheat per acre, would pay now about twenty-five pounds per annum; which would be near about the yearly value of the land. Locke.

The Castilian would rather have died in slavery himself, than paid such a sum as he found would go near to ruin him.
Addison's Spectator.

NEAR. adj.

1. Not distant. [Sometimes it is doubtful whether near be an adjective or adverb.]

This city is near to flee unto. Gm. xix. 20.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.

After he has continued his doubling in his thoughts, and enlarged his idea as much as he pleases, he is not one jot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out. Locke.

2. Advanced towards the end of an enterprise or disquisition.

Unless they add somewhat else to define more certainly what ceremonies shall stand for best, in such sort that all churches in the world shall know them to be the best, and so know them that there may not remain any question about this point; we are not a whit the nearer for that they have hitherto said. Hooker, b. iv. f. 13.

3. Close; not rambling; observant of stile or manner of the thing copied.

Hannibal Caro's, in the Italian, is the nearest, the most poetical, and the most sonorous of any translation of the Æneid. Yet though he takes the advantage of blank verse, he commonly allows two lines for one in Virgil, and does not always hit his sense. Dryden.

4. Closely related.

If one shall approach to any that is near of kin to him. Lev. xviii. 6.

5. Intimate; familiar; admitted to confidence.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakespeare.

Clarend.
 Man seduced,
 And flatter'd out of all, believing lies Against his maker: no decree of mine
 Concurring to necessitate his fall.
Milton's Par. Lost.
 Our voluntary service he requires,
 Not our necessitated.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
 Neither the Divine Providence, or his determinations, persuasions, or inflexions of the understanding or will of rational creatures doth deceive the understanding, or pervert the will, or necessitate or incline either to any moral evil.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 The politician never thought that he might fall dangerously sick, and that sickness necessitate his removal from the court.
South's Sermon.
 Th' eternal, when he did the world create
 And other agents did necessitate;
 So what he order'd they by nature do;
 Thus light things mount, and heavy downward go,
 Man only boasts an arbitrary state.
Dryden.
 The perfections of any person may create our veneration; his power, our fear; and his authority arising thence, a servile and necessitated obedience; but love can be produced only by kindness.
Rogers.
 NECESSITATION. n. f. [from necessitate.] The act of making necessary; fatal compulsion.
 This necessity, grounded upon the necessitation of a man's will without his will, is so far from lessening those difficulties which flow from the fatal destiny of the Stoicks, that it increaseth them.
Bramhall against Hobbs.
 Where the law makes a certain heir, there is a necessitation to one; where the law doth not name a certain heir, there is no necessitation to one, and there they have power or liberty to choose.
Bramhall against Hobbs.
 NECESSITATED. adj. [from necessity.] In a state of want. Not used.
 This ring was mine, and when I gave it Helen,
 I bad her, if her fortunes ever stood

Racine used the chorus in his Esther, but not that he found any necessity of it: it was only to give the ladies an occasion of entertaining the king with vocal music.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 We see the necessity of an augmentation, to bring the enemy to reason.
Addison.
 3. Want; need; poverty.
 The art of our necessities is strange,
 That can make vile things precious.
Shakef. K. Lear.
 The cause of all the distractions in his court or army, proceeded from the extreme poverty, and necessity his majesty was in.
Clarendon, b. viii.
 We are first to consult our own necessities, but then the necessities of our neighbours have a christian right to a part of what we have to spare.
L'Estrange, Fable 217.
 4. Things necessary for human life.
 These should be hours for necessities,
 Not for delights; times to repair our nature
 With comforting repose, and not for us
 To waste these times.
Shakef. Henry VIII.
 5. Cogency of argument; inevitable consequence.
 There never was a man of solid understanding, whose apprehensions are sober, and by a penive inspection advised, but that he hath found by an irresistible necessity, one true God and everlasting being.
Raleigh's History.
 Good nature or beneficence and candour, is the product of right reason, which of necessity will give allowance to the failings of others.
Dryden.
 NECK. n. f. [pneca, Saxon; neck, Dutch.]

 The very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation.
Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
 That spirit that first rul'd on thee,
 In the camp of Dan,
 Be efficacious in thee now at need.
Milton's Agonistes.
 In thy native innocence proceed,
 And summon all thy reason at thy need.
Dryden.
 2. Want; distressful poverty.
 Famine is in thy cheeks;
 Need and oppression stare within thine eyes,
 Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back.
Shakef.
 Defer not to give to him that is in need.
Ecclus. iv. 3.
 The distant heard, by fame, her pious deeds;
 And laid her up for their extreamest needs;
 A future cordial for a fainting mind.
Dryden.
 God sometimes calls upon thee to relieve the needs of thy brother, sometimes the necessities of thy country, and sometimes the urgent wants of thy prince.
South's Sermons.
 3. Want; lack of any thing for use.
 God grant we never may have need of you.
Shakef.
 God who sees all things intuitively, neither stands in need of logic, nor uses it.
Baker.
 TO NEED. v. a. [from the noun.] To want; to lack; to be in want of; to require.
 Bareft beggars
 Are in the poorest thing superfluous;
 Allow not nature more than nature needs.
 Man's life is cheap as beasts.
Shakespeare's K. Lear.
 The whole need not a physician, but the sick.
Matt ix. 12.
 Thou thy regal sceptre shalt lay by,
 For regal sceptre then no more shall need.
Milt. P. Lost.
 To ask whether the will has freedom? is to ask, whether one power has another? A question too absurd to need an answer.
Locke.
 TO NEED. v. n.
 1. To be wanted; to be necessary.
 More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
 Here needs me me whiles the famous ancestors
 Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount.
Spenser.
 When we have done it, we have done all that is in our power, and all that needs.
Locke.
 2. To have necessity of any thing; to be in want of any thing.
 We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep: but how incoherent and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being, those who are acquainted with dreams need not be told.
Locke.
 He that would discourse of things, as they agreed in the complex idea of extension and solidity, needed but use the word body.
Locke.
 NEEDER. n. f. [from need.] One that wants any thing.
 If the time thrust forth
 A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world, to seek a single man;
 And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
 In th' absence of the needer.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 NEEDFUL. adj. [need and full.] Necessary; indispensably requisite.
 Give us all things that be needful, both for our souls and bodies.
Common Prayer.
 Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
 As needful in our loves, fitting our duty?
Sha. Ham.
 All things needful for defence abound,
 Mnestheus, and brave Seresthus walk the round.
Dryden.
 To my present purpose it is not needful to use arguments, to evince the world to be finite.
Locke.
 A lonely desert and an empty land,

NEE

Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,
A single house to their benighted guest. Addison on Italy.
NEEDFULLY. adv. [from needful.] Necessarily.

They who Dare for these poems, yet both ask and read,
And like them too; must needfully, tho' few,
Be of the best. Bcn. Johnson.

NEEDFULNESS. n. f. [from needful.] Necessity.
NEEDILY. adv. [from needy.] In poverty; poorly.
NEEDINESS. n. f. [from needy.] Want; poverty.

Whereas men have many reasons to persuade; to use them all at once, weaketh them. For it argueth a neediness in every of the reasons, as if one did not trust to any of them, but fled from one to another. Bacon.

NEEDLE. n. f. [nætl, Saxon.]
1. A small instrument pointed at one end to pierce cloth, and perforated at the other to receive the thread, used in sewing.
For him you waste in tears your widow'd hours.

2. The small steel bar which in the mariners compals stands regularly north and south.
The use of the loadstone, and the mariners needle was not then known. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

NEEDLE-FISH. n. f. [needle and fish.] A kind of sea-fish.
One rhomboidal bony scale of the needle-fish. Wardour.

NEEDLEFUL. n. f. [needle and full.] As much thread as is generally put at one time in the needle.

NEEDLER. n. f. [from needle.] He who makes NEEDLEMAKER. n. f. [from needle.] Wicked; abominable.
NEEDLEWORK. n. f. [needle and work.]

1. The business of a sempstress.
2. Embroidery by the needle.

In needleworks and embroideries, it is more pleasing to have a lively work upon a lightsome ground, than a dark and melancholy work upon a lightsome ground. Bacon.

In a curious brede of needlework, one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises so insensibly, that we see the variety without being able to distinguish the total variation of the one from the first appearance of the other.

NEEDLESLY. adv. [from needles.] Unnecessarily; without need.

We render languages more difficult to be learnt, and need- lessly advance orthography into a troublesome art. Holder.

NEEDLESSNESS. n. f. [from needless.] Unnecessariness.
To explain any of St. Paul's Epistles, after so great a train of expositors, might seem censurable for its needlessness, did not the daily examples of pious and learned men justify
it. Locke's Ess. on St. Paul's Epistles.

NEEDLESS. adj. [from need.]
1. Unnecessary; not requisite.

Their exception against calumny, as if that did nourish ignorance, proceedeth altogether of a needless jealousy. Hook.

This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt;
Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward. Sha. R. III.

Would not these be great and needless abatements of their happines, if it were confined within the compals of this life only? Atterbury.

2. Not wanting; out of use.
For his weeping in the needless stream,
Poor dear, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament,
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Sha. As you Like it.

NEEDMENT. n. f. [from need.] Something necessary.
Behind
His scrip did hang, in which his needments he did bind.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 6.

NEEDS. adv. [neber, Saxon, unwilling.] Necessarily; by compulsion; indispensably.

The general and perpetual voice of men is as the sentence of God himself; for that which all men have at all times learned, nature herself must needs have taught. Hooker.

God must needs have done the thing which they imagine was to be done. Hooker, b. iii.

I must needs after him, madam, with my letter. Sha.
Another being elected and his ambassadors returned, he would needs know the cause of his repulse in that competition.
Davies on Ireland.

I perceive
Thy mortal fight to fail: objects divine Must needs impair, and weary human sense. Milt. P. Lof.

To say the principles of nature must needs be such as our philosophy makes them, is to fet bounds to omnipotence.
Glanville, Scep. c. 25.

I have affairs below,
Which I must needs dispatch before I go. Dryden.

NEEDY. adj. [from need.] Poor; necessitous; distressed by poverty.

Their gates to all were open evermore,
And one fat waiting ever them before,
To call in comers by, that needy were and poor. Fa. 2.

— In his needy shop a tortoise hung,

NEG

An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
The poor and needy praise thy name. Pf. lxxiv. 21.

We bring into the world a poor needy uncertain life, short at the longest, and unquiet at the best. Templ.

Nuptials of form, of int'rest, or of state,
Those seeds of pride are fruitful in debate:
Let happy men for gen'rous love declare,
And chafe the needy virgin, chaste and fair.

To relieve the needy, and comfort the afflicted, are duties that fall in our way every day. Addison's Spect. No. 93.

NE'ER. [for never.]
It appears I am no horse,
That I can argue and discourse;
Have but two legs, and ne'er a tail. Hudibras.

To NE'ER. v. n. [neif, Danish; niesen, Dutch.] To sneeze;
to discharge flatulencies by the nose. Retained in Scotland.
He went up and stretched himself upon him; and the child nees'd seven times, and opened his eyes. 2 Kings iv. 35.

By his neesings a light doth shine, and his eyes are like the eye-lids of the morning. Job xli. 18.

NEF. n. f. [old French, from nave.] The body of a church.
The church of St. Justina, designed by Palladio, is the most handsome, luminous, disencumbered building in Italy.
The long nef consists of a row of five cupola's, the cross one has on each side a single cupola deeper than the others.

NEFARIOUS. adj. [nefarius, Latin.] Wicked; abominable.
The most nefarius buffards, are they whom the law files incestuous buffards, which are begotten between ascendants and descendants, and between collateral, as far as the divine prohibition extends. Ayliffe's Parergon.

NEGATION. n. f. [negatio, Lat. negation, Fr.]
1. Denial; the contrary to affirmation.

Chance properly signifies, that all events called casual, among inanimate bodies, are mechanically and naturally produced according to the determinate figures, textures, and motions of those bodies, with this only negation, that those inanimate bodies are not conscious of their own operations.

Our assertions and negations should be yes and nay, for whatsoever is more than these is sin. Rogers, Ser. 9.

2. Description by negative.
Negation is the absence of that which does not naturally belong to the thing we are speaking of, or which has no right, obligation, or necessity to be present with it; as when we say a stone is inanimate, or blind, or deaf. Watts's Logic.

NE'GATIVE. adj. [negativ, Fr. negativus, Latin.]
1. Denying; contrary to affirmative.

2. Implying only the absence of something.
There is another way of denying Christ with our mouths, which is negative, when we do not acknowledge and confess him. South's Sermons.

Consider the necessary connection that is between the ne- gative and positive part of our duty. Tillotson, Ser. i.

3. Having the power to withhold, though not to compel.
Denying me any power of a negative voice as king, they are not ashamed to seek to deprive me of the liberty of using my reason with a good conscience. King Charles.

NE'GATIVE. n. f.
1. A proposition by which something is denied.
Of negatives we have far the least certainty; and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved.

2. A particle of denial; as, not.
A purer substance is defin'd,
But by an heap of negatives combin'd;
Ask what a spirit is, you'll hear them cry,
It hath no matter, no mortality. Cleaveland's Poems.

NE'GATIVELY. adv. [from negative.]
1. With denial; in the form of denial; not affirmatively.
When I asked him whether he had not drunk at all? he answered negatively. Boyle.

2. In form of speech implying the absence of something.
The fathers draw arguments from the Scripture negatively in reproof of that which is evil; Scriptures teach it not, avoid it therefore. Hooker, b. ii.

I shall shew what this image of God in man is, negatively, by shewing wherein it does not consist; and positively, by shewing wherein it does. South's Sermon.

To NE'GLECT. v. a. [neglectus, Latin.]
1. To omit by carelessness.

If he neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church.
Mat. xviii. 17.

2. To treat with scornful heedlessness.

3. To postpone.
I have been long a sleeper; but I trust
My absence doth neglect no great design,
Which by my presence might have been concluded. Sh.

NE'GLECT. n. f. [neglectus, Latin.]
1. Instance of inattention.

2. Careless treatment; scornful inattention.

I have

NEG

I have perceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence or purpose of unkindness. Shakesf. King Lear.

3. Negligence; frequency of neglect.
Age breeds neglect in all, and actions
Remote in time, like objects
Remote in place, are not beheld at half their greatness.

4. State of being unregarded.
Rescue my poor remains from vile neglect,
With virgin honours let my herse be deck'd,
And decent emblem. Prior.

NEGLECTER. n. f. [from neglect.] One who neglects.
NEGLECTFUL. adj. [neglect and full.]

NE'GLECTLESS. careless; inattentive.
Moral ideas not offering themselves to the senses, but being to be framed to the understandings, people are neglectful of a faculty they are apt to think wants nothing. Locke.

Though the Romans had no great genius for trade, yet they were not entirely neglectful of it. Arbut. on Cairns.

2. Treating with indifference.
If the father cares them when they do well, shew a cold and neglectful countenance to them upon doing ill, it will make them sensible of the difference. Locke on Education.

NEGLECTION. n. f. [from neglect.] The state of being neglect.

NEGLECTFULLY. adv. [from neglectful.] With heedless in-attention; careless indifference.

Sleeping neglection doth betray to loss
The conquests of our scarce cold conqueror. Shakesf.

NEGLECTIVE. adj. [from neglect.] Inattentive, or regardless of.
I wanted not probabilities sufficient to raise jealousies in any king's heart, not wholly stupid, and neglective of the publick peace. King Charles.

NE'GLIGENCE. n. f. [negligentia, Fr. negligentia, Latin.]
1. Habit of omitting by heedlessness, or of acting carelessly.

2. Instance of neglect.
She let it drop by negligence,
And, to th'advantage, I being here, took't up. Shakesf.

NE'GLIGENT. adj. [negligent, Fr. negligent, Latin.]
1. Careless; heedless; habitually inattentive.

My sons, be not now negligent; for the Lord hath chosen you to stand before him. 2 Chron. xxix. 11.

2. Careless of any particular.
We have been negligent in not hearing his voice. Bar. i. 19.

3. Scornfully regardless.
Let stubborn pride possess thee long,
And be thou negligent of fame;
With every mule to grace thy songs,
May'st thou despite a poet's name. Swift's Miscel.

NE'GLIGENTLY. adv. [from negligent.]
1. Carelessly; heedlessly; without exactness.

Infects have voluntary motions, and therefore imagination; and whereas some of the ancients have said that their motion is indeterminate, and their imagination indefinite, it is negligently observed; for ants go right forwards to their hills, and bees know the way to their hives. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame.
In both our English genius is express'd,
Lofty and bold, but negligently dress'd.

In comely figure rang'd my jewels shone,
Or negligently plac'd for thee alone. Prior.

2. With scornful inattention.

To NEGOTIATE. v. n. [negotior, French; from negotium, Latin.] To have intercourse of business; to traffick; to treat.

Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

She was a busy negotiating woman, and in her withdrawing chamber had the fortunate conspiracy for the king against king Richard been hatched. Bacon's Hen. VII.

It is a common error in negotiating; whereas men have many reasons to persuade, they strive to use them all at once, which weakeneth them.

A steward to embezzle those goods he undertakes to manage; an ambassador to betray his prince for whom he should negotiate; are crimes that double their malignity from the quality of the actors.

I can discover none of these frequent intercourses and negotiations, unless that Luther negotiated with a black boar.

NEGOTIATION. n. f. [negociation, Fr. from negotiate.] Treaty of business.

Oil is slow, smooth, and solid; so are Spaniards observed to be in their motion: Though it be a question yet unresolved, whether their affected gravity and slowness in their negotia- tions have tended more to their prejudice or advantage. Hou.

NEGOTIATOR. n. f. [negociator, Fr. from negotiate.] One employed to treat with others.

Those who have defended the proceedings of our nego- tiators at Gertruydenburg, dwell much upon their zeal in endeavouring to work the French up to their demands; but say nothing to justify those demands. Swift.

NEI

NEGOTIATING. adj. [from negotiate.] Employed in negotiation.

NEGRO. n. f. [Spanish; negre, Fr.] A blackmoore.
Negras transplanted into cold and flegmatic habitations;
continue their hue in themselves and their generations. Brown.

NEIF. n. f. [neif, Islandick; neif, Scottish.] Fift.
Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif. Shakesf. Hen. IV. p. ii.

To NEIGH. v. n. [hnagan, Saxon; negen, Dutch.] To utter the voice of a horse or mare.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud. Shak.

They were as fed horses, every one neighed. Jer. v. 8.
Run up the ridges of the rocks amain;
And with shrill neighings fill the neighbouring plain. Dry.

The gen'rous horse, that nobly wild,
Neighs on the hills, and dares the angry lion. Smith.

NEIGH. n. f. [from the verb.] The voice of an horse.
It is the prince of paltrys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage. Sha.

NEIGHBOUR. n. f. [nehebur, Saxon.]
1. One who lives near to another.

He sent such an addition of foot, as he could draw out of Oxford and the neighbour garrisons. Clarendon.

2. One who lives in familiarity with another; a word of civility.

Masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,
Will you undo yourselves? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. Any thing next or near.
This man shall set me packing;
I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room. Shakespeare.

4. Intimate; confidant.
The deep revolving witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels. Shakesf.

5. [In divinity.] One partaking of the same nature, and therefore entitled to good offices.
The Gospel allows no such term as a stranger; makes every man my neighbour. Sprat's Sermons.

To NEIGHBOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To adjoin to; to confine on.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best, Neighbour'd by fruit of baler quality. Shakesf. Hen. V.

Be pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

These grow on the leisurely ascending hills that neighbour
the shore. Sandy's Journey.

Things nigh equivalent and neighbouring value,
By lot are parted. Anon.

2. To acquaint with; to make near to.
That being of so young days brought up with him,
And since so neighbour'd to his youth and 'haviour. Sha.

NEIGHBOURHOOD. n. f. [from neighbour.]
1. Place adjoining.

I could not bear
To leave thee in the neighbourhood of death,
But flew in all the haste of love to find thee. Add. Cato.

2. State of being near each other.
Consider several states in a neighbourhood; in order to preserve peace between these states, it is necessary they should be formed into a balance. Swift.

3. Those that live within reach of communication.
NEIGHBOURLY. adj. [from neighbour.] Becoming a neighbour; kind; civil.

The Scottish lord, hath a neighbourly charity in him; for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay when he was able. Shakesf. Merch. of Ven.

He steals away my customers; twelve he has under bonds never to return; judge you if this be neighbourly dealing.

NEIGHBOURLY. adv. [from neighbour.] With social civility.
NEITHER. conjunct. [napden, Saxon, ne either.]

1. Not either. A particle used in the first branch of a negative sentence, and answered by nor.
Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king. 1 Kings xxii. 31.

2. It is sometimes the second branch of a negative or prohibition to any sentence.
Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it. Gen. iii. 3.

and often, though not very grammatically, yet emphatically,
If it be thought that it is the greatness of distance, whereby the sound cannot be heard; we see that lightnings and coruscations, near at hand, yield no sound neither. Bacon.

Men come not to the knowledge of which are thought innate, 'till they come to the use of reason, nor then neither.
Locke.

NE'THER.

NER

NEITHER. pronoun. Not either; nor one nor other.

He neither loves,
Nor either cares for him. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleo.
Which of them shall I take?
Both, one, or neither? neither can be enjoy'd
If both remain alive. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
Suffice it that he's dead; all wrongs die with him:
Thus I absolve myself, and excuse him,
Who fav'd my life and honour, but praise neither. Dryd.
Experience makes us sensible of both, though our narrow understandings can comprehend neither. Locke.
They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren, neither lord, neither slave to his brother; but independent of each other. Locke.

NEOPHYTE. n. f. [neophyte, Fr. neû; and φύω.] One regenerated; a convert.

NEOTERIC. adj. [neotericus, Latin.] Modern; novel; late.

NEP. n. f. [nepeta, Lat.] An herb.

NEPENTHE. n. f. [νεπέθη and πενθέω.] A drug that drives away all pains.

There where no passion, pride, or shame transport,
Lull'd with the sweet neperthe of a court;
There where no fathers, brothers, friends disgrace,
Once break their rest nor stir them from their place. Pope.

NEPHEW. n. f. [nepos, Latin; neveu, French.]

1. The son of a brother or sister.
Immortal offspring of my brother Jove;
My brightest nephew and whom best I love. Dryden.

I ask, whether in the inheriting of this paternal power, the grandson by a daughter, hath a right before a nephew by a brother? Locke.

2. The grandson. Out of use.

With what intent they were first published, those words of the nephew of Jesus do plainly enough signify, after that my grand-father Jesus had given himself to the reading of the law and the prophets, and other books of our fathers, and had gotten therein sufficient judgment, he propos'd alto to write something pertaining to learning and wisdom.

Hooker, b. v. f. 21.

Her fire at length is kind,
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.

3. Descendant, however distant. Out of use.

All the sons of these five brethren reign'd
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents the crown retain'd. Fairy Q.

NEPHRETIC. adj. [νεφρétique; nephretique, Fr.]

1. Belonging to the organs of urine.

2. Troubled with the stone.

The diet of nephritic persons ought to be such as is opposite to the alkaliescent nature of the salts in their blood.

Arbutnet on Aliments.

3. Good against the stone.

The nephritic stone is commonly of an uniform dusky green;
but some famples I have seen of it that are variegated with white, black, and sometimes yellow. Woodw. Mett. Foss.

NEPOTISM. n. f. [nepotisme, French; nepos, Latin.] Fondness for nephews.

To this humour of nepotism Rome owes its present splendor; for it would have been impossible to have furnished out so many glorious palaces with such a profusion of pictures and statues, had not the riches of the people fallen into different families. Addison on Italy.

NERVE. n. f. [nervus, Latin; nerf, Fr.] The organs of sensation passing from the brain to all parts of the body.

The nerves do ordinarily accompany the arteries through all the body; they have also blood-vessels, as the other parts of the body. Wherever any nerve sends out a branch, or receives one from another, or where two nerves join together, there is generally a ganglion or plexus. Quincy.

What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nervus shall never tremble. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. It is used by the poets for finew or tendon.

Strong Tharymed discharged a speeding blow
Full on his neck, and cut the nerves in two. Pope's Odyssey.

NEVELESS. adj. [from nerve.] Without strength.

There sunk Thalia, nerveless, faint and dead,
Had not her sister Satire held her head. Dunciad, b. iv.

NEVROUS. adj. [nerveus, Latin.] Well strung; strong; vigorous.

What nervous arms he boasts, how firm his tread,
His limbs how turn'd. Pope's Odyssey, b. viii.

2. Relating to the nerves; having the seat in the nerves.

3. [In medical cant.] Having weak or diseased nerves.

Poor, weak, nervous creatures. Cheney.

NEVRY. adj. [from nerve.] Strong; vigorous. Not in use.

NET

Death, that dark spirit, in his net arm doth lie,
Which being advanc'd, declines, and then men die. Sta.

NESCIENCE. n. f. [from nescio, Latin.] Ignorance; the state of not knowing.

Many of the most accomplished wits of all ages, have resolved their knowledge into Socrates his sum total, and after all their pains in quest of science, have sat down in a professed nescience. Glavo. Scetf. c. ii.

NESH. adj. [nepe, Saxon.] Soft; tender; easily hurt. Stin.

NESS.

1. A termination added to an adjective to change it into a substantive, denoting state or quality; as, poisonous, poisonousness;
turbid, turbidness; lovely, loveliness; from nyre, Saxon.

2. The termination of many names of places where there is a headland or promontory; from nepe, Saxon; a nose of land, or headland; as INVERNESS.

NEST. n. f. [nepe, Saxon.]

1. The bed formed by the bird for incubation and feeding her young.

If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, thou shalt not take the dam with the young. Deut. xxii. 6.

2. Any place where animals are produced.

Redi found that all kinds of putrefaction did only afford a nest and aliment for the eggs and young of those insects he admitted. Bentley.

3. An abode; place of residence; a receptacle. Generally in a bad sense; as, a nest of rogues and thieves.

Come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep. Shakef.

4. A warm close habitation, generally in contempt.

Some of our ministers having livings offered unto them, will neither, for zeal of religion, nor winning souls to God,
be drawn forth from their warm nests. Sponfer.

5. Boxes or drawers; little pockets or conveniences.

To NEST. v. n. [from the noun.] To build nests.

The cedar stretched his branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and the king of birds nested within his leaves. Howel's Vocal Fowls.

NESTEGG. n. f. [neff and egg.] An egg left in the nest to keep the hen from forsaking it.

Books and money laid for thew,
Like neffeggs, to make clients lay. Hudibras.

To NESTLE. v. n. [from neff.] To settle; to harbour; to lie close and snug, as a bird in her nest.

Their purpose was, to fortify in some strong place of the wild country, and there nestle till greater fuccours came.

A cock got into a stable was nestling in the straw among the horles. Bacon's War with Spain.

The king's fisher wonts commonly by the water-side, and nestles in hollow banks. L'Estrange.

Flut'ring there they nestle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own. Dryden.

The floor is strowed with several plants, amongst which the inails nestle all the winter. Addison on Italy.

Mark where the fly directors creep,
Nor to the shore approach too high;
The monsters nestle in the deep,
To seize you in your passing by. Swift's Miscel.

To NESTLE. v. a.

1. To house, as in a nest.

Poor heart!
That labour't yet to nestle thee,
Thou think'st by hov'ring here to get a part,
In a forbidden or forbidding tree. Donne.

Cupid found a downy bed,
And nestl'd in his little head. Prior.

2. To cherish, as a bird her young.

This Ithacus, so highly is endear'd
To this Minerva, that her hand is ever in his deeds:
She, like his mother, nestles him. Chapman's Iliad.

NESTLING. n. f. [from neffle.] A bird just taken out of the nest.

NET. n. f. [nati, Gothick; net, Saxon.] A texture woven with large interstices or meshes, used commonly as a snare for animals.

Poor bird! should'st never fear the net, nor time,
The pitfall nor the gin. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He made nets of chequer-work for the chapters, upon the top of the pillars. 1 Kings vii. 17.

Impatience intangles us like the fluttering of a bird in a net, but cannot at all ease our trouble. Taylor's Holy Living.

The vegetative tribes,
Wrapt in a filmy net, and clad with leaves. Thomson.

NETHER. adj. [neoder, Saxon; neder, Dutch.] It has the form of a comparative, but is never used in expressed, but only in implied comparison; for we see the nether part, but never say this part is nether than that, nor is any positive in use, though it seems comprised in the word beneath. Nether is not now much in use.

1. Lower; not upper.

NEU

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge. Deut. xxiv. 6.

In his picture are two principal errors, the one in the complexion and hair, the other in the mouth, which commonly they draw with a full and nether great lip. Peacham.

This odious offspring,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails; that with fear and pain
Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew Transform'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

The upper part thereof was whey, Hudibras, p. i.

The nether, orange mix'd with grey.

A beauteous maid above, but magic arts,
With barking dogs deform'd her nether parts. Reformam.

As if great Atlas from his height
Should sink beneath his heav'nly weight,
And with a mighty flaw, the flaming wall
Should gape immenly, and rushing down o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Two poles turn round the globe;
The first sublime in heaven, the last is whirl'd
Below the regions of the nether world. Dryden.

2. Being in a lower place.

This shews you are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes,
So speedily can venge. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Numbetels were those bad angels, teen
How ring on wing under the cope of hell,
Twixt upper, nethers, and surrounding fires. Milton.

3. Infernal; belonging to the regions below.

No less desire
To found this nether empire, which might rise,
In emulation, opposite to heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

The gods with hate beheld the nether sky,
The ghosts repine. Dryden's Æn.

NE'ITHERMOST. n. f. [super, of nether.] Lowest.

Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the neithermost hell. Psalms lxxxvi. 13.

Undaunted to meet there whatever pow'r,
Or spirits, of the neithermost abyss
Might in that noise reside. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

All that can be said of a liar lodged in the very neithermost hell, is this, that if the vengeance of God could prepare any place worse than hell for sinners, hell itself would be too good for him. South's Sermons.

Heracles tells us, that the eclipse of the sun was after the manner of a boat, when the concave, as to our sight, appears uppermost, and the convex neithermost. Kailaga, Bur.

NE'ETING. n. f. A reticulated piece of work.

NE'TTLE. n. f. [nevel, Saxon.] A stinging herb well known.

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamina included in an envelopment; but these are barren; for the embryos are produced either on different plants, or on different parts of the same plant, without any visible flower, which becomes a bivalve seed-vessel, sometimes gathered into round heads, and at other times small and hairy, inclosing several seeds. Miller.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholom berries thrive and ripen best, Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shakef. Hen. V.

Some to like to thorns and nettles live,
That none for them can, when they perish, grieve. Waller.

To NE'TTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To sting; to irritate;
to provoke.

The princes were so nettled at the scandal of this affront, that every man took it to himself. L'Estrange.

Although at every part of the Apostles discourse some of them might be uneasy and nettled, yet a moderate silence and attention was still observed. Bentley.

NE'TWORK. n. f. [net and work.] Any thing reticulated or decussated, at equal distances, with interstices between the interstices.

Nor any skill'd in workmanship emboss'd;
Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine;
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare,
With this so curious network to compare. Sponfer.

A large cavity in the finciput was filled with ribbons, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network. Addison's Spectator.

NEVER. adv. [ne ever, neapre, Saxon; ne æpre, not ever.]

1. At no time.

2. It is used in a form of speech handed down by the left writers, but lately accused, I think, with justice, of solec-ism; as, he is mistaken though never so wise. It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expressed thus, he is mistaken though ever so wise; that is, he is mistaken how wise soever he be. The common mode can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis; he is mistaken though so wise, as never was any: such however is the common use of the word among the best authors.

By its own force destroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd. Prior.

NEU

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man.
Congreve's Way of the World.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say. Gen. xxxiv. 12.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body, instantly make a transfusion throughout the whole body. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

They destroyed all, were it never so pleasant, within a mile of the town. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, would not be brought to see that which he had no mind to see, let it be placed in never so clear a light, and never so near him.

That prince whom you espouse, although never so vigorously, is the principal in war, you but a second. Swift.

3. In no degree.

Whoever has a faithful friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the world.

4. It seems in some phrases to have the sense of an adjective.
Not any.

He answered him to never a word, inasmuch that the governour marvelled. Matt. xxvii. 14.

5. It is much used in composition; as, never-ending, having no end; of which some examples are subjoined.

Nature affureth us by never-failing experience, and reason by infallible demonstration, that our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fear,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude. Milton.

Your never-failing sword made war to cease,
And now you heal us with the acts of peace. Waller.

So corn in fields, and in the garden flows,
Revive and raise themselves with moderate showers;
But over-charg'd with never-ceasing rain,
Become too moist. Waller.

Our heroes of the former days,
Deserv'd and gain'd their never-fading bays. Reformam.

Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays,
Nor Linus crown'd with never-fading bays. Dryden.

Leucippus, with his never-erring dart. Dryd. Ovid.

Farewel, ye never-opening gates.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find;
Meet stores of cold so greedily pursu'd,
And be refresh'd with never-waiting food. Blackmore.

Norton hung down his never-blushing head,
And all was hush'd, as folly's self lay dead. Pope's Dunci.

What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

Thy busy never-meaning face,
Thy screw'd up front, thy state grimace. Swift.

NE'VERTHELESS. adv. [never the less.] Notwithstanding that.

They plead that even such ceremonies of the church of Rome as contain in them nothing which is not of itself agreeable to the word of God, ought nevertheless to be abolished. Hooker, b. iv.

Many of our men were gone to land, and our ships ready to depart; nevertheless the admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth towards them. Bacon.

Creation must needs infer providence; and God's making the world, irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of a dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South's Sermons.

NEUROLOGY. n. f. [νεῦρον and λόγος.] A description of the nerves.

NEUROLOGY. n. f. [νεῦρον and πύμα.] The anatomy of the nerves.

NEUTER. adj. [neuter, Latin; neutre, Fr.]

1. Indifferent; not engaged on either side.

The general division of the British nation is into whigs and tories; there being very few, if any, who stand neuter in the dispute, without ranging themselves under one of these denominations. Addison's Freeholder, N. 54.

2. [In grammar.] A noun that implies no sex.

The adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make it grammar. Dryden.

A verb neuter is that which signifies neither action nor passion, but some state or condition of being; as, sedes, I sit. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

NEUTER. n. f. One indifferent and unengaged.

The learned heathens may be looked upon as neuters in the matter, when all these prophecies were new to them, and their education had left the interpretation of them indifferent. Addison on the Christian Religion.

NEW

NEUTRAL. adj. [neutral, French.]

- Indifferent; not acting; not engaged on either side.
Who can be wife, amaz'd, temperate and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man. Shakespeare.
He no sooner heard that king Henry was settled by his victory, but forthwith he sent ambassadors unto him, to pray that he would stand neutral. Bacon's Hen. VII.
The allies may be supplied for money, from Denmark and other neutral states. Addison on the War.

- Indifferent; neither good nor bad.
Some things good, and some things ill do seem,
And neutral some, in her fantastic eye. Davies.

- Neither acid nor alkaline.
Salts which are neither acid nor alkaline, are called neutral. Arbuthnot.

NEUTRAL. n. f. One who does not act nor engage on either side.The treacherous who have misled others, and the neutrals and the false-hearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, are to be noted. *Bacon.*NEUTRALITY. n. f. [neutralité, French.]

- A state of indifference; of neither friendship nor hostility.
Men who possess a state of neutrality in times of public danger, desert the common interest of their fellow-subjects. Addison.

The king, late griefs revolving in his mind,
These reasons for neutrality assign'd. Garth's Ovid.
All pretences to neutrality are justly exploded, only intending the safety and ease of a few individuals, while the public is embroiled. This was the opinion and practice of the latter Cato. Swift.

- A state between good and evil.
There is no health: physicians say, that we
At best enjoy but a neutrality. Denne.

NEUTRALLY. adv. [from neutral.] Indifferently; on neither part.NEW. adj. [newydd, Welsh; neop, Saxon; neuf, Fr.]

- Not old; fresh; lately produced, made or had; novel. It is used of things: as, young of persons.
What's the newest grief?
—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Do not all men complain how little we know, and how much is still unknown? And can we ever know more, unless something new be discovered? Burnet.

- Modern; of the present time.
Whoever converses much among old books, will be something hard to please among new. Temple's Miscellanies.

- Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty.
There names inscrib'd unnumber'd ages past,
From time's first birth, with time itself shall last;
These ever new, nor subject to decays,
Spread and grow brighter with the length of days. Pope.

- Not habituated; not familiar.
Such assemblies, though had for religion's sake, may serve the turn of heretics, and such as privily will infiltr their poison into new minds. Hooker, b. v.

- Renovated; repaired, so as to recover the first state.
Men after long emaciating diets, wax plump, fat, and almost
new. Bacon's Natural History.

- Fresh after any thing.
Nor dare we trust so soft a messenger,
New from her sickness to that northern air. Dryden.

- Not of ancient extraction.
A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outlines the rest of his contemporaries. Addison.

- New. adv. This is, I think, only used in composition for novelty, which the following examples may explain.
As soon as she had written them, a new swarm of thoughts flung her mind, she was ready with her foot to give the new-born letters both to death and burial. Sidney, b. ii.
God hath not then left this to chafe that, neither would reject that to chafe this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse. Hooker.
So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joyance of his new-come guest. Fairy 2.
Who are the violets now
That strow the green lap of the new-come spring. Shakespeare.
Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear this paper. Shakespeare.
Will you with those infirmities the owes,
Unfriended, new-adapted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

- Modern; of the present time.
Whoever converses much among old books, will be some-

Nor dare we trust so soft a messenger,
New from her sickness to that northern air. Dryden.

- Not of ancient extraction.
A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outlines the rest of his contemporaries. Addison.

- New. adv. This is, I think, only used in composition for novelty, which the following examples may explain.
As soon as she had written them, a new swarm of thoughts flung her mind, she was ready with her foot to give the new-born letters both to death and burial. Sidney, b. ii.
God hath not then left this to chafe that, neither would reject that to chafe this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse. Hooker.
So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joyance of his new-come guest. Fairy 2.
Who are the violets now
That strow the green lap of the new-come spring. Shakespeare.
Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear this paper. Shakespeare.
Will you with those infirmities the owes,
Unfriended, new-adapted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

- Modern; of the present time.
Whoever converses much among old books, will be something hard to please among new. Temple's Miscellanies.

- Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty.
There names inscrib'd unnumber'd ages past,
From time's first birth, with time itself shall last;
These ever new, nor subject to decays,
Spread and grow brighter with the length of days. Pope.

- Not habituated; not familiar.
Such assemblies, though had for religion's sake, may serve the turn of heretics, and such as privily will infiltr their poison into new minds. Hooker, b. v.

- Renovated; repaired, so as to recover the first state.
Men after long emaciating diets, wax plump, fat, and almost
new. Bacon's Natural History.

- Fresh after any thing.
Nor dare we trust so soft a messenger,
New from her sickness to that northern air. Dryden.

- Not of ancient extraction.
A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outlines the rest of his contemporaries. Addison.

I am in parliament pledge for his truth,

And lasting fealty to the new-made king. Shak. R. II.

He saw heav'n blossom with a new-born light,

On which, as on a glorious stranger gaz'd

The golden eyes of night; whose beams made bright

The way to Beth'lem, and as boldly blaz'd;

Nor ask'd leave of the sun, by day as night. Crahan.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray

Hover o'er the new-born day;

With rosy wings so richly bright,

As if he scorn'd to think of night,

When a ruddy form, whose icoul

Made heaven's radiant face look foul,

Call'd for an untimely night

To blot the newly blossom'd light. Crahan.

They gape at rich revenues which you hold,
And fain would nibble at your grandame gold.
But if you would be nibbling, here is a hand to stay your stomach.
Plunging himself in mud, and then lifting up his head a little, he casts out the said string; which the little fishes taking for a worm, and nibbling at it, he immediately plucks them both in together.
2. To carp at; to find fault with.
Instead of returning a full answer to my book, he manifestly falls a nibbling at one single passage in it.
NIBBLER. n. f. [from nibble.] One that bites by little at a time.
NICE. adj. [neje, Saxon, soft.]
1. Accurate in judgment to minute exactness; superfluously exact. It is often used to express a culpable delicacy.
Such a man was Argalus, as hardly the nicest eye can find a spot in.
He that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up.
Nor be to nice in taste myself to know,
If what I swallow be a thrush or no.
Thus critics, of less judgment than caprice,
Curious, not knowing, not exact, but nice,
Form short ideas, and offend in arts,
As most in manners, by a love to parts.
Our author, happy in a judge so nice,
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice.
2. Delicate; scrupulously and minutely cautious.
The letter was not nice, but full of charge.
Of dear import.
Dear love! continue nice and chaste;
For if you yield, you do me wrong;
Let duller wits to love's end haste,
I have enough to woo thee long.
Of honour men at first like women nice,
Raise maiden scruples at unpractis'd vice.
Having been compiled by Gratian, in an ignorant age, we ought not to be too nice in examining it.
3. Fastidious; squeamish.
God hath here
Varied his bounty so with new delights,
As may compare with heaven; and to taste,
Think not I shall be nice.
4. Easily injured; delicate.
With how much ease is a young muse betray'd?
How nice the reputation of the maid?
5. Formed with minute exactness.
Indulge me but in love, my other passions
Shall rise and fall by virtue's nicest rules.
6. Requiring scrupulous exactness.
Supposing an injury done, it is a nice point to proportion the reparation to the degree of the indignity.
My progress in making this nice and troublesome experiment, I have set down more at large.
7. Refined.
A nice and subtle happiness I see Thou to thyself proposest, in the choice
Of thy associates, Adam; and wilt taste
No pleasure, tho' in pleasure solitary.
8. Having lucky hits. This signification is not in use.
When my hours
Were nice and lucky, men did random lives
Of me for jets.
NICELY. adv. [from nice.]
1. Accurately; minutely; scrupulously.
These kind of knaves in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silky ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely.
What mean those ladies which, as tho'
They were to take a clock to pieces, go
So nicely about the bride?
He ought to study the grammar of his own tongue, that he may understand his own country-speech nicely, and speak it properly.
The next thing of which the doles ought to be nicely determined, are opiates.
At nicely carving shew thy wit;
But ne'er presume to eat a bit.
2. Delicately.
The inconveniences attending the best of governments, we quickly feel, and are nicely sensible of the share that we bear in them.
NICENESS. n. f. [from nice.]
1. Accuracy; minute exactness.
Where's now that labour'd niceness in thy drefs,
And all those arts that did the spark express?
2. Superfluous delicacy or exactness.
A strange niceness were it in me to refrain that from the ears of a person representing so much worthiness, which I am glad even to rocks and woods to utter.

NIC

Unlike the niceness of our modern dames,
Affected nymphs, with new affected names.
Nor place them where Roast crabs offend the niceness of their nose.
NICETY. n. f. [from nice.]
1. Minute accuracy of thought.
Nor was this nicety of his judgment confined only to literature, but was the same in all other parts of art.
2. Accurate performance.
As for the workmanship of the old Roman pillars, the ancients have not kept to the nicety of proportion and the rules of art so much as the moderns.
3. Fastidious delicacy; squeamishness.
He them with speeches meet
Does fair intreat; no courting nicety,
But simple true, and eke unfeigned sweet.
So love doth loath disdainful nicety.
4. Minute observation; punctilious discrimination; subtilty.
If reputation attend these conquests, which depend on the fineness and niceties of words, it is no wonder if the wit of men so employed, should perplex and subtilize the signification of sounds.
His conclusions are not built upon any niceties, or solitary and uncommon appearances, but on the most simple and obvious circumstances of these terrestrial bodies.
5. Delicate management; cautious treatment.
Love such nicety requires,
One blast will put out all his fires.
6. Effeminate softness.
7. Niceties, in the plural, is generally applied to dainties or delicacies in eating.
NICHAR. n. f.
The characters are: it hath a polypetalous or a monopetalous flower, cut very deeply into several segments, but is almost of an anomalous figure; from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a pod, beset all over with prickles, in which are contained one or two round hard seeds.
NICHE. n. f. [French.] A hollow in which a statue may be placed.
Niches, containing figures of white stone or marble, should not be coloured in their concavity too black.
They not from temples, nor from gods refrain,
But the poor lares from the niches seize,
If they be little images that please.
On the fourth a long majestic race
Of Egypt's priests, the gilded niches grace.
The heirs to titles and large estates are well enough qualified to read pamphlets against religion and high-living; whereby they fill their niches, and carry themselves through the world with that dignity which best becomes a senator and a squire.
NICK. n. f. [nick, Teutonic, the twinkling of an eye.]
1. Exact point of time at which there is necessity or convenience.
That great instrument of state had foreknowledge of it, but suffered the fatal thread to be spun out to that length for some political respects, and then to cut it off in the very nick.
What in our watches that in us is found,
So to the height and nick we up be wound,
No matter by what hand or trick.
That trick,
Had it come in the nick,
Had touch'd us to the quick.
Though dame fortune seem to smile,
And leer upon him for a while;
She'll after shew him in the nick.
Of all his glories a dog trick.
And some with symbols, signs, and tricks,
Engraved in planetary nicks,
With their own influences will fetch them
Down from their orbs, arrest and catch them.
This nick of time is the critical occasion for the gaining of a point.
2. A notch cut in any thing. [Corrupted from neck or notch.]
3. A score; a reckoning.

4. A winning throw. [niche, Fr. a ludicrous trick.]
Come, seven's the main,
Cries Ganymede; the usual trick
Seven, slur a fix, eleven a nick.
To NICK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To hit; to touch luckily; to perform by some slight artifice used at the lucky moment.
Is not the winding up of witness
A nicking more than half the bus'ness?
The just season of doing things must be nick'd, and all accidents improved.
Take away passion while it is predominant and aloof, and just in the critical height of it, nick it with some lucky or unlucky word, and you may certainly over-rule it.
2. To cut in nicks or notches.

NIG

His beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
And ever as it blaz'd they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair.
My master preaches patience, and the while
His man with scillars nicks him like a fool.
Breaks watchmen's heads, and chairmen's glazings,
And thence proceeds to nicking fashions.
3. To suit, as tallies cut in nicks.
Words nicking and resembling one another, are applicable to different significations.
4. To defeat or cozen, as at dice; to disappoint by some trick or unexpected turn.
Why should he follow you?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nick'd his captainship, at such a point.
NICKNAME. n. f. [nom de nique, French.] A name given in scoff or contempt; a term of derision; an opprobrious or contemptuous appellation.
The time was when men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname.
My mortal enemy hath not only falsely furnished me to be a feigned person, giving me nicknames, but also hath offered large sums of money to corrupt the princes with whom I have been retained.
So long as her tongue was at liberty, there was not a word to be got from her, but the same nickname in derision.
To NICKNAME. v. a. To call by an opprobrious appellation.
You nickname virtue vice;
For virtue's office never breaks men's troth.
Let's seem these facts which treasons nickname force,
Than such a fear'd ability for more.
To NICKNAME. v. a. [nick, Latin.] To wink.
There are several parts peculiar to brutes, which are wanting in man; as the seventh or suspensory muscle of the eye, the nictitating membrane, and the strong aponeuroses on the sides of the neck.
NIDE. n. f. [nidus, Lat.] A brood; as, a nide of pheasants.
NIDGET. n. f. [corrupted from niding or niding.] The opprobrious term with which the man was anciently branded who refused to come to the royal standard in times of exigency. A coward; a dastard.
There was one true English word of greater force than them all, now out of all use; it signified no more than abject, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget.
NIDIFICATION. n. f. [nidificatio, Latin.] The act of building nests.
That place, and that method of nidification, doth abundantly answer the creature's occasions.
NIDING. adj. [from nide, Saxon, violence.]
Niding, an old English word signifying abject, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget.
NIDOROUS. adj. [nidoreus, from nider.] Resembling the smell or taste of roasted fat.
Incense and nidorous smells, such as of sacrifices, were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion; which they may do by a kind of contamination of the spirits, and partly also by heating and exalting them.
The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are eructations either with the taste of the aliment, acid, nidoreus, or fetid, resembling the taste of rotten eggs.
NIDOROSITY. n. f. [from nidoreus.] Eructation with the taste of undigested roast-meat.
The cure of this nidoreus is, by vomiting and purging.
NIDULATION. n. f. [nidulor, Latin.] The time of remaining in the nest.
The ground of this popular practice might be the common opinion concerning the virtue prognostic of these birds, the natural regard they have unto the winds, and they unto them again, more especially remarkable in the time of their nidulation, and bringing forth their young.
NICE. n. f. [nice, niepee, French; neptis, Latin.] The daughter of a brother or sister.
My nice Plantagenet,
Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloster.
While he thus his nice betwixt
About our life he builds a wall.
NIGGARD. n. f. [nigger, Islandick.] A miser; a curmudgeon; a fard, avaricious, parsimonious fellow.
If thou do, then let thy bed be turned from fine gravel to weeds or mud. If thou do, let some unjust niggards make wares to spoil thy beauty.
Be not a niggard of your speech.
Serve him as a grudging matter.
As a penurious niggard of his wealth.
Be niggards of advice on no pretence;
For the worst avarice is that of sense.
NIGGARD. adj.
1. Sordid; avaricious; parsimonious.

NIG

One she found
With all the gifts of bounteous nature crown'd,
Of gentle blood; but one whole niggard fate
Had let him far below her high estate.
2. Sparing; wary.
Most free of question, but to our demands
Niggard in his reply.
To NIGGARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To flint.
The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity;
Which we will niggard with a little rest.
NIGGARDISH. adj. [from niggard.] Having some disposition to avarice.
NIGGARDLINESS. n. f. [from niggardly.] Avarice; sordid parsimony.
Niggardliness is not good husbandry, nor generosity, profusion.
NIGGARDLY. adj. [from niggard.]
1. Avaricious; sordidly parsimonious.
Where the owner of the house will be bountiful, it is not for the steward to be niggardly.
Love is like a penurious god, very niggardly of his opportunities: he must be watched like a hard-hearted treasurer.
Why are we so niggardly to stop at one fifth? Why do we not raise it one full moiety, and thereby double our money?
Providence not niggardly but wise,
Here lavishly bestows, and there denies,
That by each other's virtues we may rise.
Tiberius was noted for his niggardly temper; he used only to give to his attendants their diet.
2. Sparing; wary.
I know your mind, and I will satisfy it; neither will I do it like a niggardly answerer, going no farther than the bounds of the question.
NIGGARDLY. adv. Sparingly; parsimoniously.
I have long loved her, followed her, ingross'd opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion that could but niggardly give me fight of her.
NIGGARDNESS. n. f. [from niggard.] Avarice; sordid parsimony.
All preparations, both for food and lodging, such as would make one detect niggardness, it is so flutish a vice.
NIGH. prep. [nyp, Saxon.] At no great distance from.
They shone
Stars distant, but nigh hand seem'd other worlds.
Nigh this recess, with terror they survey,
Where death maintains his dread tyrannic sway.
NIGH. adv.

NIGHNESS. n. f. [from nigh.] Nearness; proximity.
NIGHT. n. f. [nauts, Gothick; nyxt, Saxon; nuit, Fr.]
1. The time of darkness; the time from sun-set to sun-rise.
The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here this night.
In the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night divide the spoil.
Pharaoh rose up in the night.
They did eat and drink, and tarried all night.
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
'Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn;
And they waken with that light,
Whose day shall never sleep in night.

Aread, old father, why of late
Didst thou beight me born of English blood, Whom all a fairy's son doen nominate. Fairy Q.
3. To set down; to appoint by name.
If you repay me not on such a day, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your fair flesh to be cut off. Shakef. Hamlet.
Never having intended, never designed any heir in that sense, we cannot expect he should nominate or appoint any person to it. Locke NOMINATION, n. f. [nominatio, Fr. from nominate.]
1. The act mentioning by name.
The forty-one immediate electors of the duke, must be all of several families, and of them twenty-five at least concur to this nomination. Watson's D. of Venice.
2. The power of appointing.
The nomination of persons to places, being so principal and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon
In England the king has the nomination of an archbishop; and after such nomination, he sends a congé d'elire to the dean and chapter, to elect the person thus elected by him.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
NOMINATIVE, [in grammar, nominatif, Fr.] The case that primarily designates the name of any thing, and is called right, in opposition to the other cases called oblique.
NON, v. a. [Latin.] Not. It is never used separately, but sometimes prefixed to words with a negative power.
Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,
And I partly know the instrument
That crews me from my true place in your favour;
Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still. Shakef.
A mere inclination to matters of duty, men reckon a willing of that thing; when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of what the law requires? South.
For an account at large of bishop Sanderfon's last judgment concerning God's concurrence, or non-concurrence with the actions of men, and the positive entity of sins of commission, I refer you to his letters. Pierce.
The third sort of agreement or disagreement in our ideas, which the perception of the mind is employed about, is coexistence, or non-existence in the same subject. Locke.
It is not a non-act, which introduces a custom, a custom being a common usage. Ayliffe's Parergon.
In the imperial chamber this answer is not admitted, viz.
I do not believe it as the matter is alledged. And the reason of this non-admission is, because of its great uncertainty.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
An apparitor came to the church, and informed the parson, that he must pay the tenths to such a man; and the bishop certified the ecclesiastical court under his seal on the non-payment of them, that he refused to pay them. Ayliffe.
The non-appearance of persons to support the united sense of both houses of parliament, can never be construed as a general diffidence of being able to support the charge against the patent and patentee. Swift.
This may be accounted for by the turbulence of passions upon the various and surprising turns of good and evil fortune, in a long evening at play; the mind being wholly taken up, and the consequence of non-attention so fatal. Swift.
NO'NAGE, n. f. [non and age.] Minority; time of life before legal maturity.
In him there is a hope of government;
Which in his nonage, counsel under him,
And in his full and ripen'd years, himself Shall govern well. Shakef. Henry VI. p. iii.
Be love but there, let poor six years
Be pos'd with the maturest fears Man trembles at, we straight shall find Love knows no nonage nor the mind. Craheo.
We have a mistaken apprehension of antiquity, calling that to which in truth is the world's nonage. Glaville.

NON

Those charters were not avoidable for the king's nonage;
and if there could have been any such pretence, that alone would not avoid them. Hale.
After Chaucer there was a Spenser, a Harrington, a Fairfax, before Waller and Denham were in being; and our numbers were in their nonage till these last appeared. Dryd.
In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves, and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nursing spare. Dryden.
NONCE, n. f. [The original of this word is uncertain; Skinner imagines it to come from non or once; or from nun, German, need or use; Juvius derives it less probably from noince, to do for the nonce; being, according to him, to do it merely for mischief.] Purpose; intent; design. Not now in use.
I saw a wolf
Nursing two whelps; I saw her little ones
In wanton dalliance the teat to crave,
While the her neck wreath'd from them for the nonce. Spem.
They used at first to fume the fish in a house built for the nonce. Carver.
When in your motion you are hot,
And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd him
A chalice for the nonce.
Such a light and metall'd dance,
Saw you never?
And they lead men for the nonce,
That turn round like griddle-stones. Ben. Johnson.
A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones. Clarendon.
Coming ten times for the nonce,
I never yet could see it flow but once. Caton.
NONCONFORMITY, n. f. [non and conformity.]
1. Refusal of compliance.
The will of our maker, whether discovered by reason or revelation, carries the highest authority with it; a conformity or nonconformity to it, determines their actions to be morally good or evil. Watts's Logic.
2. Refusal to join in the established religion.
Since the liturgy, rites, and ceremonies of our church, are so much struck at, and all upon a plea of conscience, it will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up as the grand pillar and buttress of nonconformity. South's Sermons.
The lady will plead the toleration which allows her non- conformity in this particular. Addison's Spectator.
NONCONFORMIST, n. f. [non and conformist.] One who refuses to join in the established worship.
On his death-bed he declared himself a non-conformist, and had a fanatic preacher to be his spiritual guide. Swift.

This is none other but the house of God, and the gate of heaven. Gen. xxviii. 17.
4. None of sometimes signifies only emphatically not.
My people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of me. Pf. lxxxi. 11.
NONEXISTENCE, n. f. [non and entity.]
1. Nonexistence.
When they say nothing from nothing, they must understand it as excluding all causes. In which sense it is most evidently true; being equivalent to this proposition, that nothing can make itself, or, nothing cannot bring its no-self out of nonentity into something. Bentley's Sermon.
2. A thing not existing.
There was no such thing as rendering evil for evil, when evil was truly a nonentity, and no where to be found. South.
We have heard, and think it pity that your inquisitive genius should not be better employed, than in looking after that theological nonentity. Arbut. and Pope's Mors. Scrib.
NONEXISTENCE, n. f. [non and existence.] Inexistence;
state of not existing.
A method of many writers, which depreciates the esteem

Common Prayers are printed.
NONPLUS, n. f. [non and plus, Latin.] Puzzle; inability to say or do more. A low word.
Let it seem never so strange and impossible, the nonplus of my reason will yield a fairer opportunity to my faith. South.
One or two rules, on which their conclusions depend, in most men have governed all their thoughts: take these from them and they are at a loss, and their understanding is perfectly at a nonplus. Locke.
Such an artifice did not begin the matter at a venture, and when put to a nonplus, pause and hesitate which way he should proceed; but he had first in his comprehensive intellect a complete idea of the whole organical body. Bentley.
To NONPLUS, v. a. [from the noun.] To confound; to puzzle; to put to a stand; to stop.
Nor is the composition of our own bodies the only wonder; we are as much nonplus'd by the most contemptible worm and plant. Glav. Scept. c. vii.
His parts were so accomplish'd,
That right or wrong he ne'er was nonplus'd. Hudibras.
That in that is a pitch beyond all those, must needs be such an one as must nonplus the devil himself to proceed farther. South.
What, you are confounded, and stand mute?
Somewhat nonplus'd to hear you deny your name. Dryden.
Tom has been eloquent for half an hour together, when he has been nonplus'd by Mr. Dry's desiring him to tell what it was that he endeavoured to prove. Speet. 471.

Mention the king of Spain or Poland, and he talks very notably; but if you go out of the gazette, you drop him.
Addison's Spectator, N^o. 105.
NOTARIAL. adj. [from notary.] Taken by a notary.
It may be called an authentick writing, though not a publick instrument, through want of a notarial evidence.
Ayliffe.
NOTARY. n. f. [notaire, Fr. from notarius, Latin.] An officer whose business it is to take notes of any thing which may concern the publick.
There is a declaration made to have that very book, and no other set abroad, wherein their present authorized notaries do write those things fully and only, which being written and there read, are by their own open testimony acknowledged to be their own.
Hooker.
Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your bond.
Shakef. M. of Venice.
One of those with him, being a notary, made an entry of this act.
Bacon's New Atlantis.
So I but your recorder am in this,
Or mouth and speaker of the universe,
A ministerial notary; for 'tis
Not I, but you and fame that make this verse.
Danne.
They have in each province, intendants and notaries.
Temp.
NOTATION. n. f. [notatio, Latin.]
1. The act or practice of recording any thing by marks: as, by figures or letters.
Notation teaches how to describe any number by certain notes and characters, and to declare the value thereof being so described, and that is by degrees and periods.
Cocker.
2. Meaning; signification.
A foundation being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to a building.
Hammond.
Conscience, according to the very notation of the word, imports a double knowledge; one of a divine law, and the other of a man's own action; and so is properly the application of a general law, to a particular instance of practice.
South's Sermons.
NOTCH. n. f. [nocchia, Italian.] A nick; a hollow cut in any thing.
The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces in the margin, of a pyramidal figure oppositely set, and with transverse notches.
Grew's Museum.
From his rug the skew'r he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes:
There take my tally of ten thousand pound.
He shew'd a comma ne'er could claim
A place in any British name;
Yet making here a perfect botch,
Thrusts your poor vowel from his notch.
Swift.
To NOTCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.
He was too hard for him directly: before Corioli, he scotched him like a carbonado.
Shakef.
The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces, cancellated and transversely notched.
Grew's Museum.

NOT

From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster.
Pope.
NOTCHWEE'D. n. f. [notch and weed.] An herb called orach.
NOTE. [for ne note.] May not.
Ne let him then admire,
But yield his sense to be too blunt and base,
That note without an hound fine footing trace.
Fairy Q.
NOTE. n. f. [nota, Lat. notte, Fr.]
1. Mark; token.
Whoever appertain to the visible body of the church, they have also the notes of external profession whereby the world knoweth what they are.
Hobbes, b. iii.
2. Notice; heed.
Give order to my servants that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence.
Shakef.
I will bestow some precepts on this virgin,
Worthy the note.
Shakef. All's well that ends well.
3. Reputation; consequence.
Divers men of note have been brought over into England.
Abbot's Description of the World.
Andronicus and Junia are of note among the apostles.
Rom. xvi. 7.
As for metals, authors of good note assure us, that even they have been observed to grow.
Boyle.
4. Reproach; stigma.
The more to aggravate the note,
With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat.
Shakef.
5. Account; information; intelligence.
She that from Naples
Can have no note; unless the sun were post,
The man 'th' moon's too slow.
Shakef. Tempest.
In suits of favour, the first coming ought to take little place; so far forth consideration may be had of his trust, that if intelligence of the matter could not otherwise have been had but by him, advantage be not taken of the note, but the party left to his other means, and in some sort recompensed for his discovery.
Bacon's Essay 49.
6. Tune; voice.
These are the notes wherewith are drawn from the hearts of the multitude to many fighs; with these tunes their minds are exasperated against the lawful guides and governors of their souls.
Hooker, b. iv.
The wakeful bird tunes her nocturnal note.
Milton.
I now must change those notes to tragick.
Milton.
You that can tune your founding strings so well,
Of ladies beauties and of love to tell;
Once change your note, and let your lute report
The justest grief that ever touch'd the court.
Waller.
One common note on either lyre did strike,
And knaves and fools we both abhor'd alike.
Dryden.
7. Single found in music.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony!
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony;
Thro' all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man.
Dryden.
8. State of being observed.
Small matters come with great commendation, because they are continually in use and in note; whereas the occasion of any great virtue cometh but on festivals.
Bacon.
9. Short hint; final paper.
He will'd me
In heedfull't reservation to bestow them,
As notes whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note.
Shakespeare.
In the body's prison to the lies,
As through the body's windows she must look,
Her divers pow'rs of sense to exercise,
By gath'ring notes out of the world's great book.
Davies.
10. Abbreviation; symbol.
Contract it into a narrow compass by short notes and abbreviations.
Baker on Learning.
11. A small letter.
A hollow cane within her hand he brought,
But in the concave had inclos'd a note.
Dryden.
12. Written paper.
I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy, for perpetually reading their sermons; perhaps my frequent hearing of foreigners, who never make use of notes, may have added to my disgust.
Swift.
13. A paper given in confession of a debt.
His note will go farther than my bond.
John Bull.
14. Explanatory annotation.
The best writers have been perplexed with notes, and obscured with illustrations.
Felton on the Classics.
NOTEBOOK. n. f. [note and book.] A book in which notes and memorandums are set down.
Cassius all his faults observ'd;
Set in a notebook, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,
To call into my teeth.
Shakespeare, J. Cæsar.
To NOTE. v. a. [note, Latin; noter, French.]
1. To

NOT

1. To observe; to remark; to heed; to attend; to take notice of.
The fool hath much pined away.
No more of that, I have noted it well. Shakef. K. Lear.
If much you note him,
You shall offend him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I began to note
The stormy Hyades, the rainy goat. Addis. Ovid.
Wandering from clime to clime, observant stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.
2. To deliver; to set down.
Saint Augustin speaking of devout men, noted how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they gave unto the felloes and chapters read. Hooker, b. vi.
Note it in a book, that it may be for ever and ever. If. xxx. 8.
3. To charge with a crime.
Sine veste Dianam, agrees better with Livia, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julia's, who were both noted of incontinency. Dryden.
4. [In music.] To set down the notes of a tune.
Noted. part. adj. [from note.] Remarkable; eminent; celebrated.
A noted chymist procured a privilege, that none but he should vend a spirit. Boyle.
Justinian's laws, if we may believe a noted author, have not the force of laws in France or Holland. Baker.
NOTER. n. f. [from note.] He who takes notice.
NOTHING. n. f. [no and thing; nothing, Scottish.]
1. Negation of being; nonentity; universal negation; opposed to something.
It is most certain, that there never could be nothing. For, if there could have been an instant, wherein there was nothing, then either nothing made something, or something made itself; and so was, and acted, before it was. But if there never could be nothing; then there is, and was, a being of necessity, without any beginning. Grew's Cef.
We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing; we assert an eternal God to have been the efficient cause of it. Bentley's Serm.
This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philosophical sense; so we say there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it; but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is air in it. Watts's Logick.
2. Nonexistence.
Mighty states characterless are great
To dusty nothing. Shakef. Troilus and Cressida.
3. Not any thing; no particular thing.
There shall nothing die. Ex. ix. 4.
Yet had his aspect nothing of severe,
But such a face as promis'd him sincere. Dryden.
Philosophy wholly speculative, is barren and produces nothing but vain ideas. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Nothing at all was done, while any thing remained undone.
4. No other thing.
Nothing but a steady resolution brought to practice; God's grace used, his commandments obeyed, and his pardon begged; nothing but this will intitle you to God's acceptance. Watts's Prep. for Death.
Words are made to declare something; where they are, by those who pretend to instruct, otherwise used, they conceal indeed something; but that which they conceal, is nothing but the ignorance, error, or sophistry of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing else under them. Locke.
5. No quantity or degree.
The report which the troops of horse make, would add nothing of courage to their fellows. Clarendon.
6. No importance; no use; no value.
The outward shew of churches, draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whatever some of our late too nice fools say, there is nothing in the seemly form of the church. Spenser's Ireland.
Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of naught. Lsaiah xli. 24.
7. No possession or fortune.
A most homely shepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unspeakable estate. Shak. W. Tale.
8. No difficulty; no trouble.
We are industrious to preserve our bodies from slavery, but we make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts. Ray on the Creation.
9. A thing of no proportion.
The charge of making the ground, and otherwife is great, but nothing to the profit. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
10. Trifle; something of no consideration or importance.
I had rather have one scratch my head it's fun,
When the alarm were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakespeare's Cor.
My dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive,

NOT

- 'Tis nothing, says the fool; but says the friend,
This nothing, Sir, will bring you to your end.
Do I not see your droop'd-belly swell?
That period includes more than a hundred sentences that might be writ to express multiplication of nothings, and all the fatiguing perpetual business of having no business to do. Pope's Letters.
1. Nothing has a kind of adverbial signification. In no degree; not at all.
Who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth?
Auria nothing dismayed with the greatness of the Turks' fleet, still kept on his courie. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
But Adam with such counsel nothing sway'd. Milton.
NOTHINGNESS. n. f. [from nothing.]
1. Nihilty; nonexistence.
His art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privations, and lean emptiness. Dante.
2. Nothing; thing of no value.
I a nothingness in deed and name,
Did scorn to hurt his forfeit carcase. Hudibras, p. i.
NOTICE. n. f. [notice, French; notitia, Latin.]
1. Remark; heed; observation; regard.
The thing to be regarded in taking notice of a child's miscarriage is, what root it springs from. Locke.
This is done with little notice: very quick the actions of the mind are performed. Locke.
How ready is envy to mingle with the notices which we take of other persons! Watts.
2. Information; intelligence given or received.
I have given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall and his dutchess will be here. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
NOTIFICATIONS. n. f. [notification, F. from notifi.] Act of making known; representation by marks or symbols.
Four or five torches elevated or depressed out of their order, either in breadth or longways, may, by agreement, give great variety of notifications. Holder's Elements of Speech.
TO NOTIFY. v. a. [notify, Fr. notifico, Latin.] To declare; to make known; to publish.
There are other kind of laws, which notify the will of God. Hooker, b. ii. f. 2.
The fame is notified in the notablest places of the whole diocess. Whitgift.
Good and evil operate upon the mind of man, by those respective appellations by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. South's Serm.
This solar month is by civil faction notified in authentic calendars the chief measure of the year: a kind of standard by which we measure time. Holder.
NOTION. n. f. [notion, Fr. notio, Latin.]
1. Thought; representation of any thing formed by the mind; idea; image; conception.
Many actions are punished by law, that are acts of ingratitude; but this is merely accidental to them, as they are such acts; for if they were punished properly under that notion, and upon that account, the punishment would equally reach all actions of the same kind. South's Serm.
The fiction of some beings which are not in nature; second notions, as the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real separate being. Dryden's State of Innocence.
What hath been generally agreed on, I content myself to assume under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write. Newt. Opt.
There is nothing made a more common subject of discourse than nature and it's laws; and yet few agree in their notions about these words. Cheyne's Phil. Prim.
That notion of hunger, cold, sound, colour, thought, wish, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, sound, wish, &c. Watts's Logick.
2. Sentiment; opinion.
God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts and notions vain. Milt.
It would be incredible to a man who has never been in France, should one relate the extravagant notion they entertain of themselves, and the mean opinion they have of their neighbours. Addison's Freeholder, No. 30.
Sentual wits they were, who, it is probable, took pleasure in ridiculing the notion of a life to come. Atterbury.
3. Sense; understanding; intellectual power. This sense is frequent in Shakespeare, but not in use.
His notion weakens, his discernings Are lethargy'd. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
So told, as earthly notion can receive. Milt. P. Leg.
NOTIONAL. adj. [from notion.]
1. Imaginary; ideal; intellectual; subsisting only in idea; visionary; fantastical.
The general and indefinite contemplations and notions, of the elements and their conjugations, of the influences of heaven,

NOT

- heaven, are to be set aside, being but notional and ill-limited; and definite axioms are to be drawn out of measured instances. Bacon's Natural History, No. 835.
Happiness, object of that waking dream
Which we call life, mistaking; fugitive theme
Of my pursuing verte, ideal shade,
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.
We must be wary, lest we ascribe any real subsistence or personality to this nature or chance; for it is merely a notional and imaginary thing; an abstract universal, which is properly nothing; a conception of our own making, occasioned by our reflecting upon the settled course of things; denoting only thus much, that all those bodies move and act according to their essential properties, without any consciousness or intention of so doing. Bentley's Serm.
2. Dealing in ideas, not realities.
The most forward notional dictators sit down in a contented ignorance. Glavin. Scpf. c. xx.
NOTIONALITY. n. f. [from notional.] Empty, ungrounded opinion. A word not in use.
I aimed at the advance of science, by discrediting empty and talkative notionalty. Glavin. to Albius.
NOTIONALLY. adv. [from notional.] In idea; mentally; in our conception, though not in reality.
The whole rational nature of man consists of two faculties, understanding and will, whether really or notionally distinct, I shall not dispute. Norris's Miscel.
NOTORIETY. n. f. [notoriety, Fr. from notorius.] Publick knowledge; publick exposure.
We see what a multitude of pagan testimonies may be produced for all those remarkable passages; and indeed of several, that more than answer our expectation, as they were not subjects in their own nature so exposed to publick notoriety. Addison on Christ. Relig.
NOTORIOUS. adj. [notorius, Lat. notorius, Fr. from notus.] Publickly known; evident to the world; apparent; not hidden. It is commonly used of things known to their disadvantage; whence by those who do not know the true signification of the word, an atrocious crime is called a notorious crime, whether publick or secret.
What need you make such ado in cloaking a matter too notorious. Whitgift.
The goodness of your intercepted packets
You writ to the pope against the king; your goodness,
Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious. Shakef.
I shall have law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame. Shakef. Com. Err.
In the time of king Edward III. the impediments of the conquest of Ireland are notorious. Davies.
What notorious vice is there that doth not blemish a man's reputation?
The inhabitants of Naples have been always very notorious for leading a life of laziness and pleasure, which arises partly out of the plenty of their country, and partly out of the temper of their climate. Addison on Italy.
The bishops have procured some small advancement of rents; although it be notorious that they do not receive the third penny of the real value. Swift's Miscel.
NOTORIOUSLY. adv. [from notorious.] Publickly; evidently; openly.

This is notoriously discoverable in some differences of brake or fern. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
Ovid tells us, that the cause was notoriously known at Rome, though it be left so obscure to after ages. Dryden.
Should the genius of a nation be more fixed in government, than in morals, learning, and complexion; which do all notoriously vary in every age. Swift.
NOTORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from notorious.] Publick fame; notoriety.
TO NOTT. v. a. To hear. Ains.
NOTWHEAT. n. f. [not and wheat.]
Of wheat there are two sorts; French, which is bearded, and requirith the best soil, and notwheat, so termed because it is unbearded, being contented with a meaner earth. Carw.
NOTWITHSTANDING. conj. [This word, though in conformity to other writers called here a conjunction, is properly a participial adjective, as it is compounded of not and withstanding, and answers exactly to the Latin non obstante; it is most properly and analogically used in the ablative case absolute with a noun; as, he is rich notwithstanding his loss; it is not so proper to say, he is rich notwithstanding he has lost much; yet this mode of writing is too frequent. Addison has used it: but when a sentence follows, it is more grammatical to insert that; as, he is rich notwithstanding that he has lost much. When notwithstanding is used absolutely, the expression is elliptical, this or that being understood, as in the following passages of Hooker.]
1. Without hindrance or obstruction from.
Those on whom Christ bestowed miraculous cures, were

NOU

- so transported that their gratitude made them, notwithstanding his prohibition, proclaim the wonders he had done for them. Decoy of Piety.
2. Although. This use is not proper.
A person languishing under an ill habit of body, may lose several ounces of blood, notwithstanding it will weaken him for a time, in order to put a new ferment into the remaining mass, and draw into it fresh supplies. Addison.
3. Nevertheless; however.
They which honour the law as an image of the wisdom of God himself, are notwithstanding to know that the same had an end in Christ. Hooker, b. iv.
The knowledge is small, which we have on earth concerning things that are done in heaven: notwithstanding this much we know even of fairs in heaven, that they pray. Hooker, b. v. f. 23.
He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
Open as day, for melting charity: Shakef. Henry IV.
Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint;
As humorous as winter.
NOTUS. n. f. [Latin.] The southwind.
With adverse blast upturns them from the south,
Notus and Afer black, with thund'rous clouds
From Sierra Lione. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

2. [In the civil law.] Appendant to the code, and of later enactment.
By the novel constitutions, burial may not be denied to any one. Ayliffe's Parergon.
NOVEL. n. f. [novelle, French.]
1. A small tale, generally of love.
Nothing of a foreign nature; like the trifling novels which Ariosto inserted in his poems. Dryden.
Her mangl'd fame in barb'rous pastime lost,
The coxcomb's novel and the drunkard's toast. Prior.
2. A law annexed to the code.
By the civil law, no one was to be ordained a presbyter till he was thirty-five years of age: though by a later novel it was sufficient, if he was above thirty. Ayliffe's Par.
NOVELIST. n. f. [from novel.]
1. Innovator; assertor of novelty.
Tellesius, who hath renewed the philosophy of Parmenides, is the best of novelists. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 69.
Aristotle rose,
Who nature's secrets to the world did teach,
Yet that great soul our novelists impeach.
The fooleries of some affected novelists have discredited new discoveries. Glavin. Scpf.
2. A writer of novels.
NOVELTY. n. f. [nouveauté, French.] Newness; state of being unknown to former times.
They which do nothing but that which men of account did before them, are, although they do amiss, yet the less faulty, because they are not the authors of harm: and doing well, their actions are freed from prejudice or novelty. Hooker, b. v. f. 7.
Novelty is only in request; and it is dangerous to be aged in any kind of course. Shakef. Measure for Measure.
As religion entertains our speculations with great objects, so it entertains them with new; and novelty is the great parent of pleasure; upon which account it is that men are so much pleased with variety. South's Sermons.
NOVEMBER. n. f. [Latin.] The eleventh month of the year, or the ninth reckoned from March, which was, when the Romans named the months, accounted the first.

Looking upon them as in their original differences and combinations, and as selected out of a natural stock of nine quaternions, or four novenaries, their nature and differences lie most obvious to be understood. Holder.
NOVERCAL. adj. [novercalis, from noverca, Latin.] Having the manner of a stepmother; becoming a stepmother.
When the whole tribe of birds by incubation, produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more novercal way. Derham.
NOUGHT. n. f. [ne aught, not any thing, Saxon; as therefore we write aught not ought for any thing, we should, according to analogy, write naught not nought, for nothing; but a custom has irreverently prevailed of using naught for bad, and nought for nothing.

 1. Not any thing; nothing.

In young Rinaldo fierce desires he spy'd,
 And noble heart, of rest impatient,
 To wealth or sovereign power he nought apply'd. Fairfax.

Yet who so bold, but says he sees it not?
 Bad is the world, and it will come to naught,
 When such ill dealings must be seen in thought. Shakef.

Such smiling rogues as these foeth ev'ry passion;
 Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
 With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters,
 As knowing naught, like dogs, but following. Shakef.

Ye are of nothing, and your work of nought. If. xli. 24.
 Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,
 And devilish machinations come to naught. Par. Reg.

2. To set at naught; not to value; to slight; to scorn; to disregard.

 That princely novice was struck dead by thee. Shakef.

Bring me to the sight of Isabella,
 A novice of this place. Shakef. Measure for Measure.
 You are novices; 'tis a world to see

How tame, when men and women are alone,
 A meacock wretch can make the curstest frow. Shakef.
 We have novices and apprentices, that the succession of the former employed men do not fail. Bacon.

If any unexperienced young novice happens into the fatal neighbourhood of such pests, presently they are playing his full purse and his empty pate. South's Sermons.

I am young, a novice in the trade,
 The fool of love, unpractis'd to peruse;
 And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
 But caught myself lie struggling in the snare.

And the I love, or laughs at all my pain,
 Or knows her worth too well, and pays me with disdain. Dry.
 In these experiments I have set down such circumstances by which either the phenomenon might be rendered more conspicuous, or a novice might more easily try them, or by which I did try them only. Newt. Opt.

2. One who has entered a religious house, but not yet taken the vow.
 NOVIATE. n. f. [noviciatus, French.]

1. The state of a novice; the time in which the rudiments are learned.

 The Lord shall raise him up a king over Israel that day: but what? even now. 1 Kings xiv. 14.

Refer all the actions of this short and dying life to that state which will shortly begin, but never have an end; and this will approve itself to be wisdom at last, whatever the world judge of it now. Tillotson.

Now that languages abound with words standing for such combinations, an usual way of getting these complex ideas, is by the explication of those terms that stand for them. Lacke.

2. A little while ago.
 Now the blood of twenty thousand men
 Did triumph in my face, and they are fled. Shakef.
 How frail our passions!

They that but now for honour and for plate,
 Made the sea blub, with blood resign their hate. Waller.
 They that but now for honour and for plate,
 Made the sea blub, with blood resign their hate. Waller.

3. At one time or respect; at another time.
 Now high, now low, now matter up, now mifs. Pope.

4. It is sometimes a particle of connection, like the French et, and Latin autem; as, if this be true, he is guilty; now this is true, therefore he is guilty.

Now whatsoever he did or suffered, the end thereof was to open the doors of the kingdom of heaven, which our iniquities had shut up. Hooker, b. v. f. 44.

NOW

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him. Now to affect the malice of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them. Shakef.

Then cried they all again, saying, not this man but Barabbas; now Barabbas was a robber. St. John.

Now by these numbers he implieth climacterical years. Bro.
 Pheasants which are granivorous birds, the young live mostly upon ants eggs. Now birds, being of a hot nature, are very voracious, therefore there had need be an infinite number of insects produced for their sustenance. Roy.

The other great and undoing mischief which befalls men, is by their being misrepresented. Now by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to others in the way of slander and detraction. South's Sermons.

Helim thought himself, that the first day of the full moon of the month Tizpa, was near at hand. Now it is a received tradition among the Persians, that the souls of the royal family, who are in a state of bliss, do, on the first full moon after their decease, pass through the eastern gate of the black palace. Addison's Guardian.

The praise of doing well
 Is to the ear, as ointment to the smell.
 Now if some flies, perchance, however small
 Into the alabastrer urn should fall,
 The odours die. Prior.

The only motives that can be imagined of obedience to laws, are either the value and certainty of rewards, or an apprehension of justice and severity. Now neither of these, exclusive of the other, is the true principle of our obedience to God. Rogers, Sermon. 1.

A human body forming in such a fluid in any imaginable posture, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law. There will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above. Now what can make the heavier particles of bone ascend above the lighter ones of flesh, or depress these below those, against the tendency of their own nature. Bentley's Sermons.

5. After this; since things are so, in familiar speech.
 How shall any man distinguish now betwixt a parasite and a man of honour, where hypocrisy and interest look so like duty and affection? L'Estrange.

6. Now and then; at one time and another uncertainly. This word means, with regard to time, what is meant by here and there, with respect to place.

Now and then they ground themselves on human authority, even when they most pretend divine. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.
Now and then something of extraordinary, that is any thing of your production, is requisite to refresh your character. Dryden.

He who resolves to walk by the gospel rule of forbearing all revenge, will have opportunities every now and then to exercise his forgiving temper. Asterbury.

They now and then appear in the offices of religion, and avoid some scandalous enormities. Rogers, Sermon. 13.

NOV. n. f. Present moment.
 Nothing is there to come, and nothing past,
 But an eternal now does ever last. Cowley.

She vanish'd, we can scarcely say the dy'd,
 For but a now did heav'n and earth divide:
 This moment perfect health, the next was death. Dryden.

Not less ev'n in this despicable now,
 Than when my name fill'd Africk with affrights. Dryden.

NOWADAYS. adv. [This word, though common and used by the best writers, is perhaps barbarous.] In the present age.
 Not so great as it was wont of yore,
 It's nowadays, ne half so straight and fore. Hubbard.

Reason and love keep little company together nowadays. Shakef. Lear's Midsummer's N. Dream.

It was a vestal and a virgin fire, and differed as much from that which passes by this name nowadays, as the vital heat from the burning of a fever. South's Sermons.

Such are those principles, which by reason of the bold cavils of perverse and unreasonable men, we are nowadays put to defend. Tillotson, Sermon. 1.

What men of spirit nowadays,
 Come to give sober judgment of new plays. Garriek's Ep.

NO'WED. adj. [nuet, French.] Knotted; intertwined.

Can wedlock know so great a curse,
As putting husbands out to nurse? Cleaveland.

6. In composition, any thing that supplies food.

Put into your breeding pond three melters for one spawner; but if into a nurse pond or feeding pond, then no care is to be taken. Walton's Angler.

To NURSE. v. a. [from the noun, or by contraction from nurish; nourrir, Fr.]

1. To bring up a child not one's own.

Shall I call a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child? Ex. ii. 7.

2. To bring up any thing young.

I was nurs'd in swaddling cloaths with cares. Wisd. vii. 7.

Him in Egerian groves Aricia bore,
And nurs'd his youth along the marshy shore. Dryden.

3. To feed; to keep; to maintain.

Thy daughters shall be nurs'd at thy side. Is. lx. 4.

The Nileans in their dark abode, Nurs'd secretly with milk the thriving God. Addison.

4. To tend the sick.

5. To pamper; to foment; to encourage; to soften; to cherish.

And what is strength, but an effect of youth, which if time nurse, how can it ever cease? Davies.

By what fate has vice so thriven amongst us, and by what hands been nurs'd up into so uncontroll'd a dominion? Locke on Education.

Our monarchs were acknowledged here,
That they their churches nursing fathers were. Denham.

NURSER. n. f. [from nurse.]

1. One that nurses.

See where he lies, inher'd in the arms
Of the most bloody nurse of his harms. Shakef.

2. A promoter; a fomentor.

NURSERY. n. f. [from nurse.]

1. The act or office of nursing.

I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

2. That which is the object of a nurse's care.

She went forth among her fruits and flow'rs,
To visit how they prosper'd, bud and bloom
Her nursery: they at her coming sprung,
And touch'd by her fair tendance gladder grew. Milton.

NUT

My paper is a kind of nursery for authors, and some who have made a good figure here, will hereafter flourish under their own names.

4. Place where young children are nursed and brought up. Addison's Guard.
T'w' swathing cloaths, the other from their nursery were stol'n. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

You see before you the spectacle of a Plantagenet, who hath been carried from the nursery to the sanctuary, from the sanctuary to the direful prison, from the prison to the hand of the cruel tormentor, and from that hand to the wide wilderness; for so the world hath been to me. Bacon.

Forthwith the devil did appear,
Not in the shape in which he plies
At miss's elbow when she lies;
Or stands before the nurs'ry doors,
To take the naughty boy that roars. Prior.

They have public nurseries, where all parents are obliged to send their infants to be educated. Gull. Trav.

5. The place or state where any thing is fostered or brought up, from a nursery of children, or whence any thing is to be removed from a nursery of trees.

This keeping of cows is of itself a very idle life, and a fit nursery for a thief. Spenser on Ireland.

To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy. Shakespeare.

A luxurious court is the nursery of diseases; it breeds them, it encourages, nourishes, and entertains them. L'Estrange.

A nursery erects its head,
Where queens are form'd and future heroes bred;
Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryden.

NURSING. n. f. [from nurse.] One nursed up; a fondling.

Then was she held in sovereign dignity,
And made the nursling of nobility. Spenser.

I was his nursling once, and choice delight,
His destin'd from the womb. Mili. Agonistes.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nursling spare. Dryden.

NURTURE. n. f. [contracted from nurture, French.]

1. Food; diet.

For this did th' angel twice descend?
Ordain'd thy nurture holy, as of a plant
Select and sacred. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Education; institution. Little used.

She should take order for bringing up of wards in good nurture, not suffer them to come into bad hands. Spenser.

The thorny point
Of bare distress, hath ta'en from me the shew
Of smooth civility; yet am I inland bred,
And know some nurture. Shakespeare. As you like it.

TO NURTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To educate; to train; to bring up.

Thou broughtest it up with thy righteousness, and nurturedest it in thy law; and reformedst it with thy judgment. 2 Esdr. viii. 12.

He was nurtured where he had been born in his first rudiments, till the years of ten.

When an insolent despoiler of discipline, nurtured into impudence, shall appear before a church governor, severity and resolution are that governor's virtues. South.

2. To nurture up; to bring by care and food to maturity.

They suppose mother earth to be a great animal, and to have nurtured up her young offspring with a conscious tenderness. Bentley's Serm.

TO NURSE. v. a. To fondle; to cherish. Corrupted from nurse. Ains.

NUT. n. f. [hnuz, Saxon; noot, Dutch; noix, Fr.]

1. The fruit of certain trees; it consists of a kernel covered by a hard shell. If the shell and kernel are in the center of a pulpy fruit, they then make not a nut but a stone.

One chanc'd to find a nut
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel-root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel;
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this Fay, dear queen be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you safe from peril. Drayt. Nymphid.

Nuts are hard of digestion, yet possess some good medicinal qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A small body with teeth, which correspond with the teeth of wheels.

The force of this faculty may be more conveniently used by the multiplication of several wheels, together with nuts belonging unto each, that are used for the roasting of meat. Wilkin's Mathem. Magick.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled, will hardly move. Roy on the Creation.

NUTBROWN. adj. [nut and brown.] Brown like a nut kept long.

Young and old come forth to play,

NUT

Till the live-long daylight fail,
Then to the spicy nutbrown ale. Milton's Penn.

When this nutbrown sword was out,
With stomach huge he laid about. Hudibras, p. i.

Two milk-white kids run frisking by her side,
For which the nutbrown lads, Erithacis,
Full often offer'd many a savoury kiss. Dryden.

King Hardicute, midst Danes and Saxons stout, Carous'd in nutbrown ale, and din'd on gROUT. King.

NUTCRACKERS. n. f. [nut and crack.] An instrument used to enclose nuts and break them by pressure.

He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nutcrackers. Addison's Spectator.

NUTGALL. n. f. [nut and gall.] Excrecence of an oak.

In vegetable excretions, maggots terminate in flies of constant shapes, as in the nutgalls of the outlandish oak. Brown.

NUTHATCH. n. f. A bird.

NUTJOBBER. n. f. A bird.

NUTPECKER. n. f. A bird.

NUTHOOK. n. f. [nut and hook.] A stick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered.

Nutbook, Nutbook, you lie. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

NUTMEG. n. f. [nut and megit, French.]

The nutmeg is a kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and separated from that and from its investient coat, the mace before it is sent over to us; except that the whole fruit is sometimes sent over in preserve, by way of sweet-meat or as a curiosity. The nutmeg is of a roundish or oval figure, of a compact or firm texture, and its surface furrowed: it is of an extremely agreeable smell and an aromatick taste.

There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male which is long and cylindrical, but it has less of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the shape of an olive. The Dutch import the nutmegs and mace from the East-Indies, and supply all Europe with them. The tree which produces them is not unlike our pear-tree in its manner of growth: its leaves, whether green or dried, have, when bruised, a very fragrant smell; and the trunk or branches, cut or broken off, yield a red liquor like blood. This tree is carefully cultivated. But that which produces the male nutmeg grows wild in the mountainous parts of the Moluccas. Nutmeg is much used in our foods, and is of excellent virtues as a medicine. Hill.

The second a dry and hofculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth a kernel included in the shell, which lieth under the mace, is the same we call nutmeg. Brown's V. Br.

I to my pleasant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant scent. Sandys.

NUTSHELL. n. f. [nut and shell.] The hard substance that incloses the kernel of the nut.

I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A fox had me by the back, and a thousand pound to a nutshell, I had never got off again. L'Estrange.

It seems as easy to me, to have the idea of space empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutshell without a kernel. Locke.

NUTTREE. n. f. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts; hazle.

Of trees you shall have the nuttree and the oak. Peasbush.

Like beating nuttrees, makes a larger crop. Dryden.

NUTRICATION. n. f. [nutricatio, Lat.] Manner of feeding or being fed.

Besides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a second argument to overthrow this airy nutrication. Brown.

NUTRIMENT. n. f. [nutrimentum, Latin.] That which feeds or nourishes; food; aliment.

This slave
Has my lord's meat in him,
Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment? Shakespeare.

The stomach returns what it has received, in strength and nutriment, diffused into all the parts of the body. South.

Does not the body thrive and grow,
By food of twenty years ago?
And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift's Miscell.

NUTRIMENTAL. adj. [from nutriment.] Having the qualities of food; alimental.

By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digestion as an emulsion. Arb.

NUTRITION. n. f. [from nutritio, nutre, Lat. nutrition, Fr.] The act or quality of nourishing, supporting strength, or encreasing growth.

New parts are added to our substance to supply our continual decayings; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is so regularly distributed. Glavin. Scip. c. iii.

The obstruction of the glands of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot. Pope.

NUTRI. n. f.

NUZ

NUTRI. n. f. [from nutris, Latin.] Having the quality of nourishing.

O may'st thou often see Thy furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain. Philips.

Nutritious! secret nitre lurks within.
The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious; and the nutritious juice itself resembles the white of an egg in all its qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

NUTRITIVE. adj. [from nutrio, Latin.] Nourishing; nutritive; alimental.

NUTRITURE. n. f. [from nutrio, Latin.] The power of nourishing.

Never make a meal of flesh alone, have some other meat with it of less nutriture. Harvey on Consump.

TO NUZZLE. v. a. [This word, in its original signification, seems corrupted from nurse; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers supposed it to come from nozzle or nose, and in that sense used it.]

1. To nurse; to foster.

Old men long nuzzled in corruption, scorning them that would seek reformation. Sidney.

NYS

2. To go with the nose down like a hog.

He charged through an army of lawyers, sometimes with sword in hand, at other times nuzzling like an eel in the mud. Arbutnot's John Bull.

Sir Roger shook his ears, and nuzzled along, well satisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arb. J. Bull.

The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind. Pope.

NYMPH. n. f. [νύμφη; nymphas, Lat.]

1. A goddess of the woods, meadows, or waters.

And as the moisture which the thirsty earth sucks from the sea, to fill her empty veins,
From out her womb at last doth take a birth,
And runs a nymph along the grassy plains. Davies.

2. A lady. In poetry.

This resolve no mortal dame,
None but those eyes cou'd have o'erthrown;
The nymph I dare not, need not name. Waller.

NYS. [A corruption of ne is.] None is; not is. Obsolete.

Thou findest fault, where nys to be found,
And buidest strong work upon a weak ground. Spenser.

OAK

O Has in English a long sound; as, oak, grove, stone, alone, broke, coal, droll; or short, got, knot, shot, prong, long. It is usually denoted long by a fervile a subjoined; as, mean; or by e at the end of the syllable; as, bone: when these vowels are not appended, it is generally short, except before ll; as, droll, scroll, and even then sometimes short; as, loll.

1. O is used as an interjection of wishing or exclamation. O that we, who have resisted all the designs of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger! Decay of Piety. O! were he present, that his eyes and hands might see, and urge, the death which he commands. Dryden.

2. O is used with no great elegance by Shakespeare for a circle or oval.

Can this cockpit hold
The vasty field of France? or may we cram Within this wooden O, the very casks
That did affright the air at Agincourt? Shakespeare.

OAF, n. f. [This word is variously written; aufr, of, and opb; it seems a corruption of ouph, a demon or fairy, in German als, from which elf; and means properly the flame with changeling; a foolish child left by malevolent ouphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they steal away.]

1. A changeling; a foolish child left by the fairies. These, when a child happens to be got, Which after proves an idiot, When folk perceive it thrive not, The fault therein to mother: Some silly doating brainless calf, That understands things by the half, Says that the fairy left this oaf, And took away the other. Drayton, Nymphid.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot.

OAFISH, adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull; doltish.

OAFISHNESS, n. f. [from oafish.] Stupidity; dullness.

OAK, n. f. [ac, æc, Saxon; which, says Skinner, to shew how easy it is to play the fool, under a shew of literature and deep researches, I will, for the diversion of my reader, derive from ōmos, a house; the oak being the best timber for building. Skinner seems to have had Junius in his thoughts, who on this very word has shewn his usual fondness for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or oak, says the grave critic, signified among the Saxons, like robur among the Latins, not only an oak but strength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode deduci potest, from ἐλκω, strength; by taking the three first letters and then sinking the λ, as is not uncommon.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which consist of a great number of small slender threads. The embryos, which produced at remote distances from these on the same tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard scaly cups: the leaves are sinuated. The species are five. Miller.

He return'd with his brows bound with oak. Shakespeare.

He lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakespeare.

No tree beareth so many bastard fruits as the oak: for besides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, sticking close to the body of the tree without stalk. Bacon's Nat. History.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up and spreads by flow degrees:
Three centuries he grows, and three he lays Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryden.

An oak growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopped, is still the same oak. Locke.

A light earthy, stony, and sparry matter, incruited and affixed to oak leaves. Woodward on Foss.

In the days of Homer every grove, river, fountain, and

OAR

OAK tree, were thought to have their peculiar deities. Udolpho.
Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber and the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

OAK, [Evergreen.]
The leaves are, for the most part, indented, or sinuated, and in some the edges of the leaves are prickly, and are evergreen: it hath amentaceous flowers, which are produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree: the fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many sorts of tools and utensils; and affords the most durable charcoal in the world. Miller.

OAKAPPLE, n. f. [oak and apple.] A kind of spongy excrescence on the oak.

Another kind of excrescence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in oakapples, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

OAKEN, adj. [from oak.] Made of oak; gathered from oak. No nation doth equal England for oaken timber wherewith to build ships. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

By lot from Jove I am the pow'r
Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bow'r. Milton.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

An oaken garland to be worn on festivals, was the recompense of one who had covered a citizen in battle. Addison.

He snatched a good tough oaken cudgel, and began to brandish it. Arbutnot's J. Bull.

OAKENPIN, n. f. An apple.
Oakenpin, so called from its hardness, is a lasting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the West-bury apple, though not in form. Mortimer.

OAKUM, n. f. [A word probably formed by some corruption.] Cords untwisted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are stopp'd.

They make their oakum, wherewith they chalk the seams of the ships, of old sear and weather beaten ropes, when they are over spent and grown to rotten as they serve for no other use but to make rotten oakum, which moulders and wastes away with every sea as the ships labour and are tossed. Rail.

Some drive old oakum thro' each seam and rift;
Their left hand does the calking-iron guide;
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

OAR, n. f. [ape, Saxon; perhaps by allusion to the common expression of plowing the water, from the same root with ear, to plow, ara, Lat.] A long pole with a broad end, by which vessels are driven in the water, the resistance made by water to the oar pushing on the vessel.

The oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. Shakespeare, Jul. Cesar.

So tow'rd a ship the oar-finn'd gallies ply,
Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly,
Stand but to fall reveng'd. Danham's Poem.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide,
E'er sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did leam,
Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryden.

Its progressive motion may be effected by the help of several oars, which in the outward ends of them shall be like the fins of a fish to contract and dilate.

To OAR, v. n. [from the noun.] To row.
He more undaunted on the ruin rode,
And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood. Pope.

To OAR, v. a. To impel by rowing.
His bold head
Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty strokes. Shakespeare's Temp.

To th' shore.

OBD

OAR, adj. [from oar.] Having the form or use of oars.
His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet,
In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

The swan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, proudly rows
Her state with oary feet. Milton.

OAST, n. f. A kiln. Not in use.
Empty the binn into a hog-bag, and carry them immediately to the oast or kiln, to be dried. Mortimer.

OATCAKE, n. f. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats.

Take a blue stone they make haver or oatcakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacbam.

OATEN, adj. [from oat.] Made of oats; bearing oats.
When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And metry larks are ploughmen's clocks. Shakespeare.

OATH, n. f. [aith, Gothick; as, Saxon.] The distance between the noun oath, and the verb swear, is very observable, as it may shew that our oldest dialect is formed from different languages.] An affirmation, negation, or promise, corroborated by the attestation of the Divine Being.

Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whole dear fake thou then didst rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths Descended into perjury to love me. Shakespeare.

He that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts as I am a soldier.

—An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate. Shakespeare.

We have consultations, which inventions shall be published, which not: and take an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret. Bacon.

Those called to any office of trust, are bound by an oath to the faithful discharge of it: but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon those who believe that he is. Swift.

OATHABLE, adj. [from oath.] A word not used.] Capable of having an oath administered.

You're not oathable,
Altho' I know you'll swear
Into strong flutters th' immortal gods. Shakespeare.

OATHEREAKING, n. f. [oat and break.] Perjury; the violation of an oath.
His oathbreaking he mended thus,
By now forswearing that he is forsworn. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

OATMALT, n. f. [oat and malt.] Malt made of oats.
In Kent they brew with one half oatmalt, and the other half barley-malt. Mortimer's Husbandry.

OATMEAL, n. f. [oat and meal.] Flower made by grinding oats.
Oatmeal and butter, outwardly applied, dry the scab on the head. Arbutnot on Allment.

Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
Of aches, leather, oatmeal, bran, and chalk. Gay.

OATMEAL, n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

OATS, n. f. [acen, Saxon.] A grain, which in England is generally given to horses, but in Scotland supports the people.
It is of the grass leaved tribe; the flowers have no petals, and are disposed in a loose panicle: the grain is eatable. The meal makes tolerable good bread. Miller.

The oats have eaten the horses.
It is bare mechanism, no otherwise produced than the turning of a wild oatbeard, by the infirmation of the particles of moisture. Locke.

For your lean cattle, fodder them with barley straw first, and the oat straw last. Mortimer's Husbandry.

His horse's allowance of oats and beans, was greater than the journey required. Swift.

OATHISTLE, n. f. [oat and thistle.] An herb. Ainsworth.

OBAMBULATION, n. f. [obambulation, from obambulo, Latin.] The act of walking about.

To OBDUCE, v. a. [obduco, Latin.] To draw over as a covering.
No animal exhibits its face in the native colour of its skin but man; all others are covered with feathers, hair, or a cortex that is obduced over the cutis. Hale.

OBDUCTION, n. f. [from obductio, obduce, Latin.] The act of covering, or laying a cover.

OBDRUACY, n. f. [from obdrus.] Inflexible wickedness; impenitence; hardness of heart.
Thou think'st me as far in the Devil's book, as thou and Falstaff, for obdruracy and persistency. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the absolute completion of sin in final obdruracy. South's Sermon.

OBDRURATE, adj. [obdruratus, Latin.]

1. Hard of heart; inflexibly obstinate in ill; hardened; impenitent.
Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's sake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee;
Be not obdrurate, open thy deaf ears. Shakespeare.

If when you make your prayers,

OBE

God should be so obdrurate as yourselves, Shakespeare.

How would it fare with your departed souls?
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdrurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakespeare.

To convince the proud what signs avail,
Or wonders move th' obdrurate to relent;
They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim. Milton.

Obdrurate as you are, oh! hear at least
My dying prayers, and grant my last request. Dryden.

2. Hardened; firm; stubborn.
Sometimes the very custom of evil makes the heart obdrurate against whatsoever instructions to the contrary. Hooker.

A pleasing forcery could charm
Pain for a while, or anguish, and excite Fallacious hopes, or arm th' obdrurate breast
With stubborn patience, as with triple steel. Milton.

No such thought ever strikes his marble, obdrurate heart, but it presently flies off and rebounds from it. It is impossible for a man to be thorough-paced in ingratitude, till he has shook off all fetters of pity and compassion. South.

3. Harsh; rugged.
They joined the most obdrurate consonants without one intervening vowel. Swift.

OBDRURATELY, adv. [from obdrurate.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; impenitently.

OBDRURATENESS, n. f. [from obdrurate.] Stubbornness; inflexibility; impenitence.

OBDRURATION, n. f. [from obdrurate.] Hardness of heart; stubbornness.

What occasion it had given them to think, to their greater obdruration in evil, that through a froward and wanton desire of innovation, we did constrainedly those things, for which conscience was pretended? Hooker, b. iv.

OBDRURED, adj. [obdruratus, Latin.] Hardened; inflexible; impenitent.

This saw his hapless foes, but stood obdrur'd,
And to rebellious fight rallied their pow'rs Infatate. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

OBE'DIENCE, n. f. [obediencia, Fr. obediencia, Latin.] Obedience; submission to authority; compliance with command or prohibition.
If you violently proceed against him, it would shake in pieces the heart of his obediencia. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Thy husband
Craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obediencia. Shakespeare.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obediencia unto righteousness. Rom. vi. 16.

It was both a strange commission, and a strange obediencia to a commission, for men so furiously assailed, to hold their hands. Bacon's War with Spain.

Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling that which thou didst want,
Obediencia to the law of God, impos'd
On penalty of death. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

OBE'DIENT, adj. [obediens, Latin.] Submissive to authority; compliant with command or prohibition; obsequious.
To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things. 2 Cor. ii. 9.

She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise. Shakespeare, M. W. of Wind.

He humbled himself, and became obedient unto death. Phil. ii. 8.

Religion hath a good influence upon the people, to make them obedient to government, and peaceable one towards another. Tillotson, Sermon. 3.

The chief his orders gives; th' obedient band,
With due observance, wait the chief's command. Pope.

OBE'DIENTIAL, adj. [obediencial, Fr. from obedient.] According to the rule of obedience.

Faith is such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediencial submission to the command. Hammond.

Faith is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiducial submission to whatever the gospel has revealed, and an obediencial submission to the commands. Wake's Prep. for Death.

OBE'DIENTLY, adv. [from obedient.] With obedience.
We should behave ourselves reverently and obediently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly and charitably towards men. Tillotson.

OBE'ISANCE, n. f. [obeisance, Fr. This word is formed by corruption from obaisance, an act of reverence.] A bow; a courtesy; an act of reverence made by inclination of the body or knee.

Bartholomew my page,
See dress'd in all suits like a lady;
Then call him Madam, do him all obeisance. Shakespeare.

Bathsheba bowed and did obeisance unto the king. 1 K. i. 16.

OBJ

The lords and ladies paid
Their homage, with a low obsequence made;
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.

O'BELISK. n. f. [obeliscus, Latin.]
1. A magnificent high piece of solid marble, or other fine stone, having usually four faces, and lessening upwards by degrees, till it ends in a point like a pyramid. Harris.
Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.
2. A mark of censure in the margin of a book, in the form of a dagger [†].
He published the translation of the Septuagint, having compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what redundant. Grew.
OBEQUITATION. n. f. [from obsequio, Latin.] The act of riding about.
OBERRATION. n. f. [from oberro, Latin.] The act of wandering about.
OBESE. adj. [obesus, Latin.] Fat; loaden with flesh.
OBESENES. n. f. [from obese.] Morbid fatness; incumbrance of flesh.
On these many diseases depend; as on the straitness of the chest, a phthisis; on the largeness of the veins, an atrophy; on their smallness, obesity. Grew's Colmol. b. ii.
TO OBEY. v. a. [obey, French; obedi, Latin.]
1. To pay submission to; to comply with, from reverence to authority.
The will of heav'n
Be done in this and all things! I obey. Shakef. Hen. VIII.
I am aham'd, that women are so simple
To seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shakef.
Let not sin reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey in the lusts thereof. Rom. vi. 12.
Was the thy God, that her thou didst obey,
Before his voice? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Africk and India shall his pow'r obey,
He shall extend his propagated sway
Beyond the solar year, without the starry way. Dryden.
2. It had formerly sometimes to before the person obeyed, which Addison has mentioned as one of Milton's latinisms; but it is frequent in old writers; when we borrowed the French word we borrowed the syntax, obey au roi.
He commanded the trumpets to found; to which the two brave knights obeying, they performed their courses, breaking their flames. Sidney.
The flit bark, obeying to her mind,
Forth launched quickly, as the did desire. Fairy Q.
His servants ye are, to whom ye obey. Rom. vi. 16.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milton.
OBJECT. n. f. [object, Fr. objectum, Latin.]
1. That about which any power or faculty is employed.
Pardon
The flat unrais'd spirit, that hath dar'd,
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object. Shakespeare's Henry V.
They are her farthest reaching instrument,
Yet they no beams unto their objects send;
But all the rays are from their objects sent,
And in the eyes with pointed angles end.
The object of true faith is, either God himself, or the word of God: God who is believed in, and the word of God as the rule of faith, or matter to be believed. Hamm.
Those things in ourselves, are the only proper objects of our zeal, which, in others, are the unquestionable subjects of our praises. Sprat's Serm.
Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of the will. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. Something presented to the senses to raise any affection or emotion in the mind.
Dis honour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object. Shakef.
Why else this double object in our fight,
Of flight purst'd in the air, and o'er the ground. Milton.
This challenger felt some degree of concern, at the sight of so moving an object, and therefore withdrew. Atterbury.
3. [In grammar.] Any thing influenced by somewhat else.
The accusative after a verb transitive, or a sentence in room thereof, is called, by grammarians, the object of the verb. Clarke's Latin Grammar.
OBJECTGLASS. n. f. Glass remotest from the eye.
An objectglass of a telescope I once mended, by grinding it on pitch with putty, and leaning easily on it in the grinding, lest the putty should scratch it. Newt. Opt.
TO OBJECT. v. a. [objecter, Fr. objecter, Latin.]
1. To oppose; to present in opposition.
Flowers growing scattered in divers beds, will shew more so as that they be object to view at once. Bacon.

OBL

Pallas to their eyes
The mist objected, and condens'd the skies. Pope.
2. To propose as a charge criminal; or a reason adverse: with to or against.
Were it not some kind of blemish to be like unto Infidels and Heathens, it would not so usually be objected; men would not think it any advantage in the cause of religion to be able therewith justly to charge their adversaries. Hobbs.
The book requir'd due examination, and giveth liberty to object any crime against any such as are to be ordered. Whitef.
Men in all deliberations find ease to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to object and foretell difficulties; for when propositions are denied, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed, it requir'd a new work; which false point of wisdom is the bane of business. Bacon.
This the adversaries of faith have too much reason to object against too many of its professors; but against the faith itself nothing at all. Sprat's Serm.
It was objected against a late painter, that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like. Dryden.
Others object the poverty of the nation, and difficulties in furnishing greater supplies. Addison's State of the War.
There was but this single fault that Erasmus, though an enemy, could object to him. Atterbury.
OBJECTION. n. f. [objection, Fr. objection, Latin.]
1. The act of presenting any thing in opposition.
2. Criminal charge.
Speak on, Sir,
I dare your worst objections. Shakef. Henry VIII.
3. Adverse argument.
There is ever between all estates a secret war. I know well this speech is the objection and not the decision; and that it is after refuted. Bacon's War with Spain.
Whoever makes such objections against an hypothesis, hath a right to be heard, let his temper and genius be what it will. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. Fault found.
I have shewn your verses to some, who have made that objection to them. Walsh's Letter.
OBJECTIVE. adj. [objectif, Fr. objectus, Latin.]
1. Belonging to the object; contained in the object.
Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other in our minds. Wass's Logic.
2. Made an object; proposed as an object.
If this one small piece of nature still affords new matter for our discovery, when should we be able to search out the vast treasures of objective knowledge that lies within the compass of the universe? Hall's Origin of Man.
OBJECTIVELY. adv. [objectively.]
1. In manner of an object.
This may fitly be called a determinate idea, when, such as it is at any time objectively in the mind, it is annexed, and without variation determined to an articulate sound, which is to be steadily the sign of that very same object of the mind. Locke's Epistle to the Reader.
2. In a state of opposition.
The basilisk should be destroyed, in regard he first received the rays of his antipathy and venomous emission, which objectively move his sense. Brown's V. Err.
OBJECTIVENESS. n. f. [from objective.] The state of being an object.
Is there such a motion or objectiveness of external bodies, which produceth light? The faculty of light is fitted to receive that impression or objectiveness, and that objectively fitted to that faculty. Hall's Origin of Mankind.
OBJECTOR. n. f. [from object.] One who offers objections; one who raises difficulties.
But these objectors must the cause upbraid,
That has not mortal man, immortal made.
Let the objectors consider, that these irregularities must have come from the laws of mechanism. Bentley's Serm.
OBJURGATION. n. f. [objurgatio, Latin.] Reproof; reprehension.
If there be no true liberty, but all things come to pass by inevitable necessity, then what are all interrogations and objurgations, and reprehensions and expostulations? Bentley.
OBJURGATORY. adj. [objurgatorius, Latin.] Reprehensory; culpatory; chiding.
OBLATE. adj. [oblatus, Latin.] Flatted at the poles. Used of a spheroid.
By gravitation bodies on this globe will press towards its center, though not exactly thither, by reason of the spheroidical spheroidical figure of the earth, arising from its diurnal rotation about its axis. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

OBLATION. n. f. [oblation, Fr. oblatus, Latin.] An offering; a sacrifice; any thing offered as an act of worship or reverence. With that the looked upon the picture before her, and straight sigh'd, and straight tears followed, as if the idol of duty ought to be honoured with such oblations. Sidney.
Many conceive in this oblation, not a natural but a civil kind of death, and a separation from the world. Brown.
The will gives worth to the oblation, as to God's acceptance, sets the poorest giver upon the same level with the richest. South's Sermons.
I with
The kind oblation of a falling tear. Dryden.
Behold the coward, and the brave,
All make oblations at this shrine. Swift's Poems.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, Lat.] Delight; pleasure.
TO OBLIGATE. v. a. [oblige, Latin.] To bind by contract or duty.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, from oblige, Lat. obligation, Fr.]
1. The binding power of any oath, vow, duty, contract.
Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
There was no means for him as a christian, to satisfy all obligations both to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace. Bacon's Henry VII.
The better to satisfy this double obligation, you have early cultivated the genius you have to arms. Dryden.
No ties can bind, that from constraint arise,
Where either's forc'd, all obligation dies. Granville.
2. An act which binds any man to some performance.
The heir of an obliged person is not bound to make restitution, if the obligation passed only by a personal act; but if it passed from his person to his estate, then the estate passes with all its burthen. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
3. Favour by which one is bound to gratitude.
Where is the obligation of any man's making me a present of what he does not care for himself? L'Estrange.
So quick a sense did the Israelites entertain of the merits of Gideon, and the obligation he had laid upon them, that they tender him the regal and hereditary government of that people. South's Sermons.
OBLIGATORY. adj. [obligatus, Fr. from oblige.] Imposing an obligation; binding; coercive; with to or on.
And concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to Christian princes and states. Bac.
As long as the law is obligatory, so long our obedience is due. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
A people long us'd to hardships, look upon themselves as creatures at mercy, and that all impositions laid on them by a stronger hand, are legal and obligatory. Swift.
If this patent is obligatory on them, it is contrary to acts of parliament, and therefore void. Swift.
TO OBLIGE. v. a. [oblige, Fr. oblige, Latin.]
1. To bind; to impose obligation; to compel to something.
Religion oblige men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health. Tillotson.
The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law. Rogers, Serm. 15.
2. To indebted; to lay obligations of gratitude.
He that depends upon another, must oblige his honour with a boundless trust.
Since love oblige not, I from this hour
Assume the right of man's despotic power.
Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But drop from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy fight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light.
Thus man by his own strength to heaven would soar,
And would not be oblig'd to God for more. Dryden.
When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vains,
She waits or to the scaffold or the cell,
To those hills we are oblig'd for all our metals, and with them for all the conveniences and comforts of life. Bentley.
3. To please; to gratify.
A great man gets more by obliging his inferiour, than by dissuading him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South's Sermons.
Some natures are so sour and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Estrange.
Happy the people, who preserve their honour
By the same duties that oblige their prince! Add. Cato.
OBLIGEE. n. f. [from oblige.] The person bound by a legal or written contract.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligement, French.] Obligation.

OBL

I will not resist, whatever it is, either of divine or human obligation, that you lay upon me. Milton's Education.
Let this fair prince's but one minute stay, Dryden.
A look from her will your obligements pay.
OBLIGER. n. f. He who binds by contract.
OBLIGING. part. adj. [obligant, Fr. from oblige.] Civil; complaisant; respectful; engaging.
Nothing could be more obliging and respectful than the lion's letter was, in appearance; but there was death in the true intent. L'Estrange, Fab. 54.
Monseigneur Strozzi has many curiosities, and is very obliging to a stranger who desires the sight of them. Addison.
Obliging creatures! make me see
All that disgrac'd my betters, met in me. Pope.
So obliging that he ne'er oblig'd. Pope.
OBLIGINGLY. adv. [from obliging.] Civilly; complaisantly.
Eugenius informs me very obligingly, that he never thought he should have disliked any passage in my paper. Addison.
I see her taste each nauseous draught,
And so obligingly am caught;
I bless the hand from whence they came;
Nor dare distort my face for shame. Swift's Miscell.
OBLIGINGNESS. n. f. [from obliging.]
1. Obligation; force.
They look into them not to weigh the obligingness, but to quarrel the difficulty of the injunctions: not to direct practice, but excuse prevarications. Decay of Piety.
2. Civility; complaisance.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, from oblige, Latin.] Declination from perpendicularity; obliquity.
The change made by the obligation of the eyes, is least in colours of the densest than in thin substances. Newt. Opt.
OBLIQUE. adj. [oblique, Fr. obliquus, Latin.]
1. Not direct; not perpendicular; not parallel.
One by his view
Mought deem him born with ill-dispos'd skies,
When oblique Saturn sat in the house of th' agonies. Fairy Q.
If found be stopped and repelled, it cometh about on the other side in an oblique line. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
May they not pity us, condemn'd to bear
The various heav'n of an oblique sphere;
While by fix'd laws, and with a just return,
They feel twelve hours that shade, for twelve that burn. Prior.
Bavaria's stars must be accus'd which shone
That fatal day the mighty work was done,
With rays oblique upon the gallic sun. Prior.
It has a direction oblique to that of the former motion. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
Criticks form a general character from the observation of particular errors, taken in their own oblique or imperfect views; which is as unjust, as to make a judgment of the beauty of a man's body, from the shade it casts in such and such a position. Notes on the Ode.
2. Not direct. Used of sense.
Has he given the lie
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel; you must challenge him. Shakef.
3. [In grammar.] Any case in nouns except the nominative.
OBLIQUELY. adv. [from oblique.]
1. Not directly; not perpendicularly.
Of meridian altitude, it hath but twenty-three degrees, so that it plays but obliquely upon us, and as the sun doth about the twenty-third of January. Brown's Vulgar Err.
Declining from the noon of day,
The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray. Pa. Ra. Locke.
2. Not in the immediate or direct meaning.
His discourse tends obliquely to the detracting from others, or the extolling of himself. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 255.
OBLIQUENESS. n. f. [obliquitas, Fr. from oblique.]
OBLIQUITY. n. f. [obliquitas, Fr. from oblique.]
1. Deviation from physical rectitude; deviation from parallelism or perpendicularity.
Which else to several spheres thou must ascribe, Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities. Milt. P. Legl.
2. Deviation from moral rectitude.
There is in rectitude, beauty; as contrariwise in obliquity, deformity.
Count Rhodophill cut out for government and high affairs, and balancing all matters in the scales of his high understanding, hath rectified all obliquities. Hovell's Vocal For.
For a rational creature to conform himself to the will of God in all things, carries in it a rational rectitude or goodness; and to disobey or oppose his will in any thing, imports a moral obliquity. South's Sermons.
TO OBLITERATE. v. a. [oblitero, ob and litas, Latin.]
1. To efface any thing written.
2. To wear out; to destroy; to efface.
Wars and desolations obliterate many ancient monuments. Hall's Origin of Mankind.
Let men consider themselves as enshined in that unhappy contract, 4

OBN

contract, which has rendered them part of the Devil's possession, and contrive how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls. Decay of Piety.

These simple ideas, the understanding can no more refuse to have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate the images, which the objects set before it produce. Locke.

OBLITERATION. n. f. [obliteratio, Latin.] Effacement; extinction.

Considering the casualties of wars, transigrations, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all those monuments of antiquity that ages precedent at some time have yielded. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

OBLIVION. n. f. [oblivio, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.

Water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are graced
To dusty nothing. Shakef. Troil. and Cressida.

Thou shouldst have heard many things of worthy memory,
Which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Shakef. Taming of the Shrew.

Knowledge is made by oblivion, and to purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown's Vulgar Err. Pref.

Can they imagine, that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own oblivion. South.

Among our crimes oblivion may be set;

But 'tis our king's perfection to forget. Dryden.

2. Amnity; general pardon of crimes in a state.

By the act of oblivion, all offences against the crown, and all particular trespasses between subject and subject, were pardoned, remitted, and utterly extinguished. Davies.

OBLIVIOUS. adj. [obliviosus, Latin.] Causing forgetfulness.

Raze out the written troubles of the brain,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The British souls

Exult to see the crouching ghosts descend

Unnumber'd; well aveng'd, they quit the cares

Of mortal life, and drink th' oblivious lake. Philips.

Oh born to see what none can see awake!

Behold the wonders of th' oblivious lake. Pope's Dunci.

OBLONG. adj. [oblongus, Fr. oblongus, Latin.] Longer than broad; the same with a rectangle parallelogram, whose sides are unequal. Harr.

The best figure of a garden I esteem an oblong upon a defect. Temple's Miscell.

Every particle, supposing them globular or not very oblong, would be above nine million times their own length from any other particle. Bentley's Sermons.

OBLONGLY. adv. [from oblong.] In an oblong direction.

The surface of the temperate climates is larger than it would have been, had the globe of our earth or of the planets, been either spherical, or oblongly spherical. Cheyne.

OBLONGNESS. n. f. [from oblong.] The state of being oblong.

O'BLIQUE. n. f. [obliquus, Lat.]

1. Cenurious speech; blame; slander; reproach.

Reasonable moderation hath freed us from being deservedly subject unto that bitter kind of obliquy, whereby as the church of Rome doth, under the colour of love towards those things which be harmless, maintain extremely most hurtful corruptions; so we peradventure might be upbraided, that under colour of hatred towards those things that are corrupt, we are on the other side as extreme, even against most harmless ordinances. Hosker, b. iv. f. 14.

Here new aspersions, with new obliquies,

Are laid on old defects. Daniel's Civil War.

Canst thou with impious obliquy condemn

The just decree of God, pronounce'd and sworn? Milton.

Shall names that made your city the glory of the earth, be mentioned with obliquy and detraction? Addison.

Every age might perhaps produce one or two true genius,

if they were not sunk under the censure and obliquy of plodding, servile, imitating pedants. Swift.

2. Cause of reproach; disgrace. Not proper.

My chastity's the jewel of our house,

Bequeathed down from many ancestors;

Which were the greatest obliquy i'th' world

In me to lose. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

OBMUTESCENCE. n. f. [from obmutescere, Latin.] Loss of speech.

A vehement fear often produceth obmutescence. Brown.

OBNOMINOUS. n. f. [obnoxius, Latin.]

1. Subject.

I propound a character of justice in a middle form, between the speculative discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers, which are tied and obnoxious to their particular laws. Bacon's Holy War.

2. Liable to punishment.

OBS

All are obnoxious, and this faulty land,
Like fainting Hester, does before you stand,
Watching your sceptre.

We know ourselves obnoxious to God's severe justice, and that he is a God of mercy and hatred sin; and therefore that we might not have the least suspicion of his unwillingness to forgive, he hath sent his only begotten son into the world, by his dismal sufferings and cursed death, to expiate our offences.
Culamy's Sermons.

Thy name, O Varus, if the kinder pow'rs
Preserve our plains, and shield the Mantuan tow'rs, Obnoxious by Cremona's neighb'ring crime,
The wings of swans, and stronger piston'd rhyme Shall raise aloft. Dryd.

3. Liable; exposed.

Long hostility had made their friendship weak in itself, and more obnoxious to jealousies and distrusts. Hoyward.

But what will not ambition and revenge

Defend to? who aspires, must down as low

As high he soar'd; obnoxious first or last,

To basest things. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Beasts lie down,

To dew obnoxious on the grassy floor. Dryden.

OBNOMINOUSNESS. n. f. [from obnoxius.] Subjection; liable-ness to punishment.

1. Immodest; not agreeable to chastity of mind; causing low ideas.

Chemos th' obscene dread of Moab's sons. Milton.

Words that were once chaste, by frequent use grow obscene and uncleanly. Watts's Logic.

2. Offensive; disgusting.

A girdle foul with grease binds his obscene attire. Dryden.

Home as they went, the sad discourse renew'd,

Of the relentless dame to death purf'd,

And of the fight obscene to lately view'd. Dryden.

3. Inauspicious; ill omened.

Care fluns thy walks, as at the cheerful light

The groaning ghosts, and birds obscene take flight. Dryd.

It is the sun's fate like your's, to be displeasing to owls and obscene animals, who cannot bear his lustre. Pope's Lett.

OBSCENELX. adj. [from obscene.] In an impure and unchaste manner.

OBSCENENESS. n. f. [obscenitas, Fr. from obscene.] Impurity of OBSCENITY. n. f. [obscenitas, Fr. from obscene.] Impurity of thought or language; unchastity; lewdness.

Mr. Cowley asserts plainly, that obscenity has no place in

wit. Dryden.

Those fables were tempered with the Italian severity, and free from any note of infamy or obscenity. Dryden.

Thou art wickedly devout,

In Tiber ducking thrice by break of day,

To wash th' obscenities of night away. Dryden.

No pardon vile obscenity should find,

Tho' wit and art conspire to move your mind. Pope.

OBSCURATION. n. f. [obscuratio, Lat.]

1. The act of darkening.

As to the sun and moon, their obscuratio or change of colour happens commonly before the eruption of a fiery mountain. Burnet.

2. A state of being darkened.

OBSCURE. adj. [obscurus, Fr. obscurus, Latin.]

1. Dark; unlightened; gloomy, hindring light.

Who's curish his father or mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscur darkness. Prov. xx. 20.

Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet

The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,

And thro' the palpable obscur find out

His uncouth way? Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Living in the dark.

The obscur bird clamour'd the live-long night. Shakef.

3. Not easily intelligible; obscure; difficult.

I explain some of the most obscur passages, and those which are most necessary to be understood, and this according to the manner wherein he used to express himself. Dryd.

4. Not noted; not observable.

He says, that he is an obscur person; one, I suppose, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

To OBSCURE. v. a. [obscurare, Latin.]

1. To darken; to make dark.

Sudden the thunder blackens all the skies.

And the winds whistle, and the furies roll

Mountains on mountains, and obscur the pole. Pope.

2. To

OBS

2. To make less visible.

They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscur lights, which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shakef.

What must I hold a candle to my flames?

They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.

Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love, Shakef. M. of Venice.

And I should be obscur'd.

Thinking by this retirement to obscur himself from God, he infringed the omniscience and essential ubiquity of his maker. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. To make less intelligible.

By private consent it hath been used in dangerous times to obscur writing, and make it hard to be read by others not acquainted with the intrigue. Holder.

There is scarce any duty which has been so *obscur*ed by the writings of learned men, as this. Wake.

4. To make less glorious, beautiful, or illustrious.

Think'st thou, vain spirit, thy glories are the same,

And feest not now by thy ungrateful pride,

That shows me what thy faded looks did hide. Dryden.

5. OBSCURELY. adv. [from obscur.]

1. Not brightly; not luminously.

2. Out of light; privately; without notice; not conspicuously.

Such was the life of this prodigious fire,

Which in mean buildings first *obscur*ly bred,

From thence did soon to open streets aspire. Dryden.

There live retir'd,

Content thyself to be *obscur*ly good. Addison's Cato.

Let him go, pursued by silent wrath,

Meet unexpected daggers in his ways,

And in some distant land *obscur*ly die. Irene.

3. Not clearly; not plainly.

OBSCURENESS. n. f. [obscuritas, Lat. obscurité, Fr.]

OBSCURITY. n. f. [obscuritas, Lat. obscurité, Fr.]

1. Darkness; want of light.

Lo! a day of darkness and obscurity, tribulation and anguish, upon the earth. Ezther xi. 8.

Should Cynthia quit thee, Venus, and each star,

It would not form one thought dark as mine are:

I could lend them *obscur*ly now, and say,

Out of myself there should be no more day. Donne.

2. Unnoticed state; privacy.

You are not for obscurity design'd,

But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind. Dryd.

3. Darkness of meaning.

Not to mention that *obscur*ity that attends prophetic raptures, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscur. Boyle on Colours.

That this part of sacred scripture had difficulties in it:

many causes of *obscur*ity did readily occur to me. Lake.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in *obscur*ity, and has the indeterminate confusion of a negative idea, wherein I know I do not comprehend all I would,

it being too large for a finite capacity. Lake.

OBSCURATION. n. f. [obscuratio, from obscur, Lat.] Intreaty; supplication.

That these were comprehended under the sacra, is manifest from the old form of obscuratio. Silllingfleet.

OBSCURER. n. f. [obscurer, French.] I know not whether this word be not anciently mistaken for exequies, exequie,

Latin: this word, however, is apparently derived from ob- sequium.

1. Funeral rites; funeral solemnities.

There was Dorilus valiantly requiting his friends help, in a great battle deprived of life, his obssequies being not more solemnized by the tears of his partakers, than the blood of his enemies. Sidney, b. ii.

Fair Juliet, that with angels doth remain,

Accept this latest favour at my hand;

That living honour'd thee

OBS

- Love rigid honesty
And strict observance of impartial laws. Recommen.
OBSERVANT. adj. [observans, Latin.]
1. Attentive; diligent; watchful.
These writers, which gave themselves to follow and imitate others, were observant sectators of those masters they admired. Raleigh's History of the World.
Wandering from clime to clime observant stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.
2. Obedient; respectful.
We are told how observant Alexander was of his master Aristotle. Digby on the Soul, Dedicat.
3. Respectfully attentive.
She now observant of the parting ray,

2. To make a remark.
Wherever I have found her notes to be wholly another's, which is the case in some hundreds, I have barely quoted the true proprietor, without observing upon it. Pope's Lett.
OBSERVER. n. f. [from observe.]
1. One who looks vigilantly on persons and things; close remaker.
He reads much;
He is a great observer; and he looks Quite thro' the deeds of men. Shakespeare, Jul. Caesar.
Angelo,
There is a kind of character in thy life,
That to th' observer doth thy history
Fully unfold. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
Careful observers may foretell the hour,
By sure prognostics than to dread a show'r. Swift.
2. One who looks on; the beholder.
If a flow pac'd star had stol'n away,
From the observer's markings, he might stay
Three hundred years to see't again. Dante.
Company, he thinks, lessens the flame of vice, by sharing it; and therefore, if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of objects. South's Sermons.

OBS

3. One who keeps any law or custom of practice.
Many nations are superstitious, and diligent observers of old customs, which they receive by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles. Spenser on Ireland.
The king after the victory, as one that had been bred under a devout mother, and was in his nature a great observer of religious forms, caused Te Deum to be solemnly sung in the presence of the whole army upon the place. Bacon.
He was so strict an observer of his word, that no contradiction whatever could make him break it. Prior.
Himself often read useful discourses to his servants on the Lord's day, of which he was always a very strict and solemn observer. Atterbury's Sermon.
OBSERVINGLY. adv. [from observing.] Attentively; carefully.

Chusing rather to use all extremities, which might drive men to desperate obstinacy, than to apply moderate remedies. King Charles.
Most writers use their words loosely and uncertainly, and do not make plain and clear deductions of words one from another, which were not difficult to do, did they not find it convenient to shelter their ignorance, or obstinacy, under the obscurity of their terms. Locke.
What crops of wit and honesty appear,
From spleen, from obstinacy, hate or fear. Pope's Ep.
OBSOLETE. adj. [obstinatus, Lat.] Stubborn; contumacious; fixed in resolution. Absolutely used, it has an ill sense; but relatively, it is neutral.
The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt t' accuse it, and Disdainful to be try'd by't. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
Yield,
Except you mean with obstinate repulse,
To slay your sov'reign. Shakespeare.
I have known great cures done by obstinate resolutions of drinking no wine. Temple.
Her father did not fail to find
In all she spoke, the greatness of her mind;
Yet thought she was not obstinate to die,
Nor deem'd the death she promis'd was so nigh. Dryden.
Look on Simo's mate;
No as to meek, no as to obstinate. Pope's Ep. ii.
OBSOLETE. adv. [from obstinatus.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; with unshaken determination.
Pembroke abhorred the war as obstinately, as he loved hunting and hawking. Clarendon, b. ii.
A Greek made himself their prey,
T' impose on their belief, and Troy betray;
Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent
To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryden.

God hath put us into an imperfect state, where we have perpetual occasion of each other's assistance. Swift.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array,
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay, seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

TO OCCASION. v. a. [occasioner, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To cause casually.
Who can find it reasonable that the soul should, in its retirement, during sleep, never light on any of those ideas it borrowed not from sensation, preserve the memory of no ideas but such, which being occasioned from the body, must needs be less natural to a spirit?
The good Psalmist condemns the foolish thoughts, which a reflection on the prosperous state of his affairs had sometimes occasioned in him. Atterbury.

2. To cause; to produce.
I doubt not, whether the great encrease of that disease may not have been occasioned by the custom of much wine introduced into our common tables.
By its styptic quality it affects the nerves, very often occasioning tremors. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. To influence.
If we enquire what it is that occasions men to make several combinations of simple ideas into distinct modes, and neglect others which have as much an aptness to be combined, we shall find the reason to be the end of language. Locke.

OCCASIONAL. adj. [occasional, Fr. from occasion.]
1. Incidental; casual.
Thus much is sufficient out of scripture, to verify our application

OCC

plication of the deluge, according to the Mosaic history of the flood, and according to many occasional reflections dispersed in other places of scripture concerning it. Burnet.

2. Producing by accident.
The ground or occasional original hereof, was the amazement and sudden silence the unexpected appearance of wolves does often put upon travellers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Produced by occasion or incidental exigence.
Those letters were not writ to all;
Nor first intended but occasional,
Their absent sermons. Dryd. Hind. and Panth.

OCCASIONALLY. adv. [from occasional.] According to incidental exigence; incidentally.
Authority and reason on her wait,
As one intended first, not after made Occasionally. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

I have endeavoured to interweave with the assertions some of the proofs whereon they depend, and occasionally scatter several of the more important observations throughout the work. Woodv. Nat. Hist.

OCCASIONER. n. f. [from occasion.] One that causes, or promotes by design or accident.
She with true lamentations made known to the world, that her new greatness did no way comfort her in respect of her brother's loss, whom she studied all means possible to revenge upon every one of the occasioners. Sidney, b. ii.

Some men will lead me as if I were a wilful and resolved occasioner of my own and my subjects miseries. K. Charles.

In case a man dig a pit and leave it open, whereby it happeneth his neighbour's beast to fall thereto and perish, the owner of the pit is to make it good, in as much as he was the occasioner of that loss to his neighbour. Sanderfon.

OCCECATION. n. f. [occacatio, from occare, Latin.] The act of blinding or making blind.
Those places speak of obduration and occasion, so as if the blindness that is in the minds, and hardness that is in the hearts of wicked men, were from God. Sanderfon.

OCCIDENT. n. f. [from occidens, Latin.] The west.
The evening clouds are bent
To dim his glory, and to stain the tract
Of his bright passage to the occident. Shakef. R. II.

TO OCCUDE. v. a. [occido, Latin.] To shut up.
They take it up, and roll it upon the earths, whereby occluding the pores they conserve the natural humidity, and so prevent corruption. Brown.

OCCUSSE. adj. [occlusus, Latin.] Shut up; closed.
The appulse is either plenary and occluso, so as to preclude all passages of breath or voice through the mouth; or else partial and pervious, so as to give them some passages out of the mouth. Holder's Elements of Speech.

OCCUSION. n. f. [from occlusus, Latin.] The act of shutting up.

OCCULT. adj. [occulte, Fr. occultus, Lat.] Secret; hidden; unknown; undiscoverable.
If his occult guilt
Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen. Shakef. Ham.

An artist will play a lesson on an instrument without minding a stroke; and our tongues will run divisions in a tune not missing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere; which effects are to be attributed to some secret act of the soul, which to us is utterly occult, and without the ken of our intellects.

These instincts we call occult qualities; which is all one with saying that we do not understand how they work. L'Ecl.

These are manifest qualities, and their causes only are occult. And the Aristotelians gave the name of occult qualities not to manifest qualities, but to such qualities only as they supposed to lie hid in bodies, and to be the unknown causes of manifest effects. Newt. Opt.

OCCULTATION. n. f. [occultatio, Latin.]
In astronomy, is the time that a star or planet is hid from our sight, when eclipsed by interposition of the body of the moon, or some other planet between it and us. Harris.

OCC

OCCUPANCY. n. f. [from occupans, Latin.] The act of taking possession.
Of moveables, some are things natural; others, things artificial. Property in the first is gained by occupancy, in the latter by improvement. Warburton on Literary Property.

OCCUPANT. n. f. [occupans, Latin.] He that takes possession of any thing.
Of beasts and birds the property passeth with the possession, and goeth to the occupant; but of civil people not so. Bacon.

TO OCCUPATE. v. a. [occupo, Latin.] To possess; to hold; to take up.
Drunken men are taken with a plain destitution in voluntary motion; for that the spirits of the wine oppress the spirits animal, and occupy part of the place where they are, and so make them weak to move. Bacon's Nat. History.

OCCUPATION. n. f. [from occupation, Fr. occupatio, Lat.]
1. The act of taking possession.
Spain hath enlarged the bounds of its crown within this last sixscore years, much more than the Ottomans: I speak not of matches or unions, but of arms, occupations, invasions. Bacon.

2. Employment; business.
Such were the distresses of the then infant world; so incessant their occupations about provision for food, that there was little leisure to commit any thing to writing. Woodv.

In your most busy occupations, when you are never so much taken up with other affairs, yet now and then send up an ejaculation to the God of your salvation. Wake.

3. Trade; calling; vocation.
The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish. Shakef. Coriolanus.

He was of the same craft with them, and wrought, for by their occupation they were tent-makers. Acts xviii. 3.

OCCUPIER. n. f. [from occupy.]
1. A possessor; one who takes into his possession.
If the title of occupiers be good in a land unpeopled, why should it be bad accounted in a country peopled over thinly? Raleigh's Essays.

2. One who follows any employment.
Thy merchandise and the occupiers of thy merchandise, shall fall into the midst of the seas. Ezek. xxvii. 27.

TO OCCUPY. v. a. [occupo, Fr. occupo, Latin.]

TO OCCUR. v. n. [occurro, Latin.]
1. To be presented to the memory or attention.
There doth not occur to me any use of this experiment for profit. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The mind should be always ready to turn itself to the variety of objects that occur, and allow them as much consideration as shall be thought fit. Locke.

The far greater part of the examples that occur to us, are so many encouragements to vice and disobedience. Rogers.

2. To appear here and there.
In scripture, though the word occur, yet there is no such thing as heir in our author's sense. Locke.

3. To clash; to strike against; to meet.
All bodies have a determinate motion according to the degrees of their external impulse, their inward principle of gravitation, and the resistance of the bodies they occur with. Bentley's Sermons.

4. To obviate; to make opposition to. A latinism.
Before I begin that I must occur to one specious objection against this proposition. Bentley's Serm.

OCT

OCCURRENCE. n. f. [occurrence, Fr. from occur: this was perhaps originally occurrentus.]

1. Incident; accidental event.

In education most time is to be bestowed on that which is of the greatest consequence in the ordinary course and occurrences of that life the young man is designed for. Locke.

2. Occasional presentation.

Voyages detain the mind by the perpetual occurrence and expectation of something new. Watts.

OCCURRENT. n. f. [occurent, Fr. occurrent, Lat.] Incident; any thing that happens.

Contentions were as yet never able to prevent two evils, the one a mutual exchange of unfeeling and unjust disgraces, the other a common hazard of both, to be made a prey by such as study how to work upon all occurrents, with most advantage in private. Hooker's Dedicat.

He did himself certify all the news and occurrents in every particular, from Calice, to the mayor and aldermen of London. Bacon's Henry VII.

OCCURSION. n. f. [occursum, Latin.] Clash; mutual blow.

In the resolution of bodies by fire, some of the dissipated parts may, by their various occursion occasioned by the heat, stick closely. Boyle.

Now should those active particles, ever and anon jostled by the occursion of other bodies, so orderly keep their cells without alteration of site. Glauv. Scep.

OCEAN. n. f. [ocean, Fr. oceanus, Latin.]

1. The main; the great sea.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,

Will all great Neptune's ocean walk this blood Clean from my hand? Shakefp. Macbeth.

2. Any immense expanse.

Time, in general, is to duration, as place to expansion. They are so much of those boundless oceans of eternity and immensity, as is set out and distinguished from the rest, to denote the position of finite real beings, in those uniform, infinite oceans of duration and space. Locke.

OCEAN. adj. [This is not usual, though conformable to the original import of the word.] Pertaining to the main or great sea.

In bulk as huge as that sea-beast
Leviathan, which God of all his works Created huge that swim th' ocean stream. Milt. P. Lost.

Bounds were set

To darkness, such as bound the ocean wave. Milton.

OCEANICK. n. f. [from ocean.] Pertaining to the ocean. Dict.

OCELLATED. adj. [ocellatus, Latin.] Resembling the eye.

The white butterfly lays its offspring on cabbage leaves; a very beautiful reddish ocellated one. Derham's Physico-Theol.

If there be a speck in the eye, we take them off; but he were a strange oculist who would pull out the eye. Bacon.

I am no oculist, and if I should go to help one eye and put out the other, we should have but an untoward business of it. Leffrings.

OCCULUS. heli. [Latin.]

The oculus heli of the modern jewellers, and probably of Pliny, is only an accidental variety of the agate kind; having a grey horny ground, with circular delineations, and a spot in the middle of them something resembling the light of the eye; whence the stone had its name. Woodw.

ODD. adj. [oddis, Swedish.]

1. Not even; not divisible into equal numbers.

This is the third time; I hope

Good luck lies in odd numbers. Shakefp. Othello.

What verity there is in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man by even and odd; ascribing the odd unto the right side, and the even unto the left; and so by parity, or imparity of letters in mens names, to determine misfortunes. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

2. More than a round number; indefinitely exceeding any number specified.

The account of the profits of Ulster, from the fifth year of Edward III. until the eighth, do amount but to nine hundred and odd pounds. Davies on Ireland.

3. Particular; uncouth; extraordinary; not like others; not to be numbered among any class. In a sense of contempt or dislike.

Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As e'er I heard in madness. Shakefp. Measure for Measure.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white,

To make up my delights,

No odd becoming graces,

Black eyes, or little know not what's in faces. Suckling.

This blue colour being made by nothing else than by reflexion of a specular superficies, seems to add a phenomenon and so difficult to be explained by the vulgar hypothesis of philosophers, that I could not but think it deserved to be taken notice of.

When I broke loose from writers who have employed their wit and parts in propagating of vice, I did not question but I should be treated as an odd kind of a fellow. Spectator.

No fool Pythagoras was thought;

He made his listning scholars stand;

Their mouth still cover'd with their hand;

Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,

Might have refus'd to let his ears

Attend the music of the spheres. Prior.

ODD

So proud I am no slave,

So impudent I own myself no knave,

So odd, my country's ruin makes me grave. Pope.

4. Not noted; not taken into the common account; unheeded.

I left him cooling of the air with sighs,

In an odd angle of the idle. Shakefp. Tempest.

There are yet missing some few odd lads that you remember not. Shakefp. Tempest.

5. Strange; unaccountable; fantastical.

How strange or odd to'er I bear myself,

As I, perchance, hereafter shall think meet,

To put an antic disposition on. Shakefp. Hamlet.

It is an odd way of uniting parties to deprive a majority of part of their ancient right, by conferring it on a faction, who had never any right at all. Swift.

Patients have sometimes coveted odd things which have relieved them; as salt and vinegar. Arbutin, on Aliments.

6. Uncommon; particular.

The odd man to perform all three perfectly is, Joannes Sturmius. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

7. Unlucky.

On some odd time of his infirmity,

Will shake this island. Shakefp. Othello.

8. Unlikely; in appearance improper.

Mr. Locke's Essay would be a very odd book for a man to make himself master of, who would get a reputation by critical writings. Addison's Spectator, N. 291.

ODDLY. adv. [from odd.] This word and oddness, should, I think, be written with one d; but the writers almost all combine against it.

1. Not evenly.

2. Strangely; particularly; unaccountably; uncouthly.

How oddly will it found, that I Must ask my child forgiveness. Shakefp. Tempest.

One man is prefl'd with poverty, and looks somewhat oddly upon it. Collier on the Spleen.

The dreams of sleeping men are made up of the waking man's ideas, though for the most part oddly put together. Locke.

This child was near being excluded out of the species of man barely by his shape. It is certain a figure a little more oddly turned had cast him, and he had been executed. Locke.

The real essence of substances we know not; and therefore are so undetermined in our nominal essences, which we make ourselves, that if several men were to be asked concerning some oddly-shaped fetus, whether it were a man or no? it is past doubt, one should meet with different answers. Locke.

Her awkward love indeed was oddly fated;

She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

As masters in the clare obscure,

With various light your eyes allure:

A flaming yellow here they spread;

Draw off in blue, or charge in red;

Yet from these colours oddly mix'd,

Your light upon the whole is fix'd. Prior.

They had seen a great black substance lying on the ground very oddly-shaped.

Fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped, according to the modification of their constituent salts, or the cavities they are formed in. Bentley's Sermon.

ODDNESS. n. f. [from odd.]

1. The state of being not even.

2. Strangeness; particularity; uncouthness.

Coveting to recommend himself to posterity, Cicero begged it as an alms of the historians, to remember his consulship; and observe the oddness of the event; all their histories are lost, and the vanity of his request stands recorded in his own writings. Dryden's Aurengzebe, Pref.

A knave is apprehensive of being discovered; and this habitual concern puts an oddness into his looks. Collier.

My wife fell into a violent disorder, and I was a little discomposed at the oddness of the accident. Swift.

I continued feeling again the same pain; and finding it grow violent I burnt it, and felt no more after the third time; was never off my legs, nor kept my chamber a day. Temple.
2. Distant from.
Cicero's Tufculum was at a place called Grotto Ferrate, about two miles off this town, though most of the modern writers have fixed it to Frefcati. Addison on Italy.
OFFAL. n. f. [off fall, says Skinner, that which falls from the table: perhaps from offa, Latin.]
1. Waste meat; that which is not eaten at the table.
He let out the offals of his meat to interest, and kept a register of such debtors in his pocket-book. Arbutnot.
2. Carrion; coarse flesh.
I should have fatted all the region kites
With this slave's offal. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
Cram'd, and gorg'd, nigh burst,
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton's Par. Lost.
3. Refuse; that which is thrown away as of no value.
To have right to deal in things sacred, was accounted an argument of a noble and illustrious descent; God would not accept the offals of other professions. South.
If a man bemoan his lot,
That after death his mouldring limbs shall rot,
A secret sting remains within his mind;
The fool is to his own cast offals kind.
They commonly fat hogs with offal corns. Dryden.
4. Any thing of no esteem.
What trash is Rome? what rubbish and what offal? Shakespeare.
18. N

OFF

OFFENCE. n. f. [offense, Fr. offensa, from offendo, Lat.]

1. Crime; act of wickedness.
Thither with speed their hasty course they ply'd,
Where Christ the Lord for our offences dy'd. Fairfax.
Thou hast stol'n that, which after some few hours
Were thine without offence. Shakesp. Henry IV.
2. A transgression.
If, by the law of nature, every man hath not a power to punish offences against it, I see not how the magistrates of any community can punish an alien of another country. Locke.

3. Injury.
I have given my opinion against the authority of two great men, but I hope without offence to their memories; for I loved them living, and reverence them dead. Dryden.
4. Displeasure given; cause of disgust; scandal.
Giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed. 2 Cor. vi. 3.
He remembered the injury of the children of Bean, who had been a fiare and an offence unto the people. 1 Mac. iv.
The pleasures of the touch are greater than those of the other senses; as in warming upon cold, or refrigeration upon heat: for as the pains of the touch are greater than the pleasures of other senses, so likewise are the pleasures. Bacon.

5. Anger; displeasure conceived.
Earnest in every present humour, and making himself brave in his liking, he was content to give them just cause of offence when they had power to make just revenge. Sidney.
6. Attack; act of the assailant.
Courtesy that seemed incorporated in his heart, would not be perjured to offer any offence, but only to stand upon the best defensive guard. Sidney.

- OFFENSIVE. adj. [offense and full.] Injurious; giving displeasure.
It seems your most offensive act
Was mutually committed. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
OFFENSIBLE. adj. [from offense.] Unoffending; innocent.
You are but now cast in his mood, a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offence-less dog to afflict an imperious lion. Shakesp. Othello.

- To OFFEND. v. a. [offendo, Latin.]
1. To make angry.
If much you note him
You shall offend him, and extend his passion;
Feed and regard him not. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Three sorts of men my soul hateth, and I am greatly offended at their life. Beatus xxv. 2.
The emperor himself came running to the place in his armour, severely reproving them of cowardice who had forfaken the place, and grievously offended with them who had kept such negligent watch. Knox's Hist. of the Turks.

2. To assail; to attack.
He was slain to defend himself, and withal so to offend him, that by an unlucky blow the poor Philoxenus fell dead at his feet. Sidney.
3. To transgress; to violate.
4. To injure.
Cheaply you sin, and punish crimes with ease,
Not as th' offended, but th' offenders please. Dryden.

- To OFFEND. v. n.
1. To be criminal; to transgress the law.
This man that of earthly matter maketh graven images, knoweth himself to offend above all others. Wisd. xiv. 13.
Whoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. James ii. 10.
2. To cause anger.
I shall offend, either to detain or give it. Shakesp. Lear.

3. To commit transgression.
Our language is extremely imperfect, and in many instances it offends against every part of grammar. Swift.
- OFFENDER. n. f. [from offend.]
1. A criminal; one who has committed a crime; a transgressor;
a guilty person.
All that watch for iniquity are cut off, that make a man an offender for a word. Is. xxix. 21.
So like a fly the poor offender dies;
But like the wasp, the rich escapes and flies. Denham.
How shall I lose the sin, yet keep the sense,
And love th' offender, yet detest th' offence?
The conscience of the offender shall be sharper than an avenger's sword. Clarissa.

2. One who has done an injury.
All vengeance comes too short,
Which can pursue th' offender. Shakesp. King Lear.
OFFENDRESS. n. f. [from offender.] A woman that offends.
Virginity murders itself, and should be buried in highways out of all sanctified limits, as a desperate offendress against nature. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

- OFFENSIVE. adj. [offensif, Fr. from offensus, Lat.]
1. Causing anger; displeasing; disgusting.
Since no man can do ill with a good conscience, the consolation which we herein seem to find is but a meer deceitful

OFF

pleasing of ourselves in error, which at the length must needs turn to our greater grief, if that which we do to please God most, be for the manifold defects thereof offensive unto him.

It shall suffice, to touch such customs of the Irish as seem offensive and repugnant to the good government of the realm.
Spenser on Ireland.

2. Causing pain; injurious.
It is an excellent opener for the liver, but offensive to the stomach. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Some particular acrimony in the stomach sometimes makes it offensive, and which custom at last will overcome. Arbut.
3. Assailant; not defensive.
He recounted the benefits and favours that he had done him, in provoking a mighty and opulent king by an offensive war in his quarrel. Bacon.

4. We enquire concerning the advantages and disadvantages betwixt those military offensive engines used among the ancients, and those of these latter ages. Wilkins.
- OFFENSIVELY. adv. [from offensive.]
1. Mischievously; injuriously.
In the least thing done offensively against the good of men, whose benefit we ought to seek for as our own, we plainly shew that we do not acknowledge God to be such as indeed he is. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.

2. So as to cause uneasiness or displeasure.
A lady had her sight disordered, so that the images in her hangings did appear to her, if the room were not extraordinarily darkened, embellished with several offensively vivid colours. Boyle on Colours.
3. By way of attack; not defensively.

- OFFENSIVENESS. n. f. [from offensive.]
1. Injuriousness; mischief.
2. Cause of disgust.
The muscles of the body, being preserved sound and limber upon the bones, all the motions of the parts might be explicated with the greatest ease and without any offensiveness.
Grew's Anatomy.

- To OFFER. v. a. [offero, Lat. offerre, Fr.]
1. To present to any one; to exhibit any thing so as that it may be taken or received.
The heathen women under the Mogul, offer themselves to the flames at the death of their husbands. Collin.
Some ideas forwardly offer themselves to all mens understandings; some sort of truths result from any idea, as from the mind puts them into propositions. Locke.
Servants placing happiness in strong drink, make court to my young master, by offering him that which they love. Locke.

2. To sacrifice; to immolate; to present as an act of worship.
They offered unto the Lord of the spoil which they had brought, seven hundred oxen. 2 Chron. xv. 11.
He shall offer of it all the fat thereof. Lev. vii. 3.
An holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices. 1 Pet. ii. 5.
Whole herds of offer'd bulls about the fire,
And bristled boars and woolly sheep expire. Dryden.
When a man is called upon to offer up himself to his conscience, and to resign to justice and truth, he should be so far from avoiding the lists, that he should rather enter with inclination, and thank God for the honour. Collin.

3. To bid, as a price or reward.
Nor shouldst thou offer all thy little store,
Will rich Iolas yield, but offer more. Dryden.
4. To attempt; to commence.
Lyimachus armed about three thousand men, and began first to offer violence. 2 Mac. iv. 40.
5. To propose.
In all that great extent wherein the mind wanders in remote speculations, it stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered for its contemplation.

- Our author offers no reason.
To OFFER. v. n.
1. To be present; to be at hand; to present itself.
No thought can imagine a greater heart to see and contemn danger, where danger would offer to make any wrongful threatening upon him. Sidney, b. ii.
Th' occasion offers, and the youth complies. Dryden.

2. To make an attempt.
We came close to the shore, and offered to land. Bacon.
One offers, and in offering makes a stay;
Another forward sets, and doth no more. Dan. Civ. War.
I would treat the pope and his cardinals roughly, if they offered to see my wife without my leave. Dryden.

3. With at.
I will not offer at that I cannot master. Bacon.
I hope they will take it well that I should offer at a new thing, and could forbear presuming to meddle where any of the learned pens have ever touched before. Gravatt.
Write down and make signs to him to pronounce them, and guide him by shewing him by the motion of your own lips

OFF

lips to offer at one of those letters; which being the easiest,
he will stumble upon one of them. Holder.
The masquerade succeeded so well with him, that he would be offering at the shepherd's voice and call too. L'Estrange.
It contains the grounds of his doctrine, and offers at somewhat towards the disproof of mine. Atterbury.
Without offering at any other remedy, we hastily engaged in a war, which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.

- OFFER. n. f. [offre, Fr. from the verb.]
1. Proposal of advantage to another.
Some nymphs there are, too conscious of their face;
These swell their prospects, and exalt their pride,
When offers are disdain'd, and love deny'd. Pope.

2. First advance.
Force compels this offer,
And it proceeds from policy, not love. —
— Mowbray, you overween to take it so:
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear. Shakesp.
What wouldst beg, Laertes,
That shall not be my offer, not thy asking? Shakesp.

3. Proposal made.
Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.
I enjoined all the ladies to tell the company, in case they had been in the siege and had the same offer made them as the good women of that place, what every one of them would have brought off with her, and have thought most worth the saving. Addison's Spectator.
It carries too great an imputation of ignorance, or folly, to quit and renounce former tenets upon the offer of an argument which cannot immediately be answered. Locke.

4. Price bid; act of bidding a price.
When flock is high, they come between,
Making by second hand their offers;
Then cunningly retire unseen,
With each a million in his coffers. Swift.

5. Attempt; endeavour.
Many motions, though they be unprofitable to expel that which hurteth, yet they are offers of nature, and cause motions by content; as in groaning, or crying upon pain. Bacon.
It is in the power of every one to make some essay, some offer and attempt, so as to shew that the heart is not idle or inensible, but that it is full and big, and knows itself to be so, though it wants strength to bring forth. South's Sermon.
One sees in it a kind of offer at modern architecture, but at the same time that the architect has shown his dislike of the gothic manner, one may see that they were not arrived at the knowledge of the true way. Addison on Italy.

6. Something given by way of acknowledgment.
Fair streams that do vouchsafe in your clearness to represent unto me my blubbered face, let the tribute offer of my tears procure you stay a while with me, that I may begin yet at last to find something that pities me. Sidney, b. ii.

- OFFERER. n. f. [from offer.]
1. One who makes an offer.
2. One who sacrifices, or dedicates in worship.
If the mind of the offerer be good, this is the only thing
God respecteth. Hooker, b. v. f. 34.
When he commanded Abraham to sacrifice Isaac, the place of the offering was not left undetermined, and to the offerer's discretion. South's Sermons.

- OFFERING. n. f. [from offer.] A sacrifice; any thing immolated, or offered in worship.
Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast. Shakesp.
They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. Shakesp.
When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his feed. Is. liii. 10.

- The gloomy god
Stood mute with awe, to see the golden rod;
Admir'd the destin'd offering to his queen,
A venerable gift so rarely seen. Dryden.
What nations now to Juno's pow'r will pray,
Or offerings on my slighted altars lay?
I'll favour her,
That my awaken'd soul may take her flight,
Renew'd in all her strength, and fresh with life,
An offering fit for heaven. Addison's Cato.

- OFFERTORY. n. f. [offertoire, Fr.] The thing offered; the act of offering.
He went into St. Paul's church, where he made offertory of his standards, and had orisons and Te Deum sung. Bacon.

- OFFERTURE. n. f. [from offer.] Offer; proposal of kindness.
A word not in use.
Thou hast prevented us with offertures of thy love, even when we were thine enemies. King Charles.

- OFFICE. n. f. [office, Fr. officium, Latin.]
1. A public charge or employment.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

5

OFF

Methought this staff, mine office-badge in courts,
Was broke in twain. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.
The inference of office. Shakesp.

2. Agency; peculiar use.
All things that you should use to do me wrong, Deny their office. Shakesp. King Lear.
In this experiment the several intervals of the teeth of the comb do the office of so many prisms, every interval producing the phenomenon of one prism. Newt. Opt.

3. Business; particular employment.
The sun was sunk, and after him the star
Of Hesperus, whose office is to bring Twilight upon the earth. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix.

4. Act of good or ill voluntarily tendered.
Wolves and bears
Casting their savageness aside, have done
Like offices of pity. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Mrs. Ford, I see you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only in the simple office of love, but in all the accompaniment, complement, and ceremony of it. Shakesp. Merry W. of Windsor.
I would I could do a good office between you. Shakesp.
The wolf took this occasion to do the fox a good office. L'Estrange.

- You who your pious offices employ
To save the reliques of abandon'd Troy: Dryd. Virg.
5. Act of worship.
This gate
Instructs you how t' adore the heavens, and bows you To morning's holy office. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

6. Formulary of devotions.
Whoever hath children or servants; let him take care that they say their prayers before they begin their work: the Lord's prayer, the ten commandments, and the creed, is a very good office for them, if they are not fitted for more regular offices. Taylor's Devotion.

7. Rooms in a house appropriated to particular business.
What do we but draw anew the model
In fewer offices? at least desist
To build at all. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.
Let offices stand at distance, with some low galleries to pass from them to the palace itself. Bacon.

8. Place where business is transacted. [Officina, Lat.]
What shall good old York see there,
But empty lodgings and unfurnish'd walls,
Unpeopled offices, untrodnen stones? Sha. Rich. II.
Empson and Dudley, though they could not but hear of these scruples in the king's conscience, yet as if the king's soul and his money were in several offices, that the one was not to intermeddle with the other, went on with as great rage as ever. Bacon's Henry VII.

- To OFFICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to discharge; to do.
I will be gone, altho'
The air of Paradise did fan the house,
And angels offic'd all. Sha. All's well that ends well.

- OFFICER. n. f. [officier, French.]
1. A man employed by the publick.
'Tis an office of great worth,
And you an officer fit for the place. Shakesp.
Submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and be content
To suffer lawful censure. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

- The next morning there came to us the same officer that came to us at first to conduct us to the stranger's house. Bac.
If it should fall into the French hands, all the princes would return to be the several officers of his court. Temple.
As a magistrate or great officer he locks himself up from all approaches. South's Sermons.

- Birds of prey are an emblem of rapacious officers. A superior power takes away by violence from them, that which by violence they took away from others. L'Estrange.
2. A commander in the army.
If he did not nimble ply the spade,
His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back.
I summon'd all my officers in haste,
All came resolv'd to die in my defence. Dryden.
The bad disposition he made in landing his men, shews him not only to be much inferior to Pompey as a sea officer, but to have had little or no skill in that element. Arb.

3. One who has the power of apprehending criminals.
The thieves are possess'd with fear
So strongly, that they dare not meet each other;
Each takes his fellow for an officer. Shakesp. Henry IV.
We charge you
To go with us unto the officers. Shakesp. Henry VI.

- OFFICERED. adj. [from officer.] Commanded; supplied with commanders.
What could we expect from an army officer'd by Irish papists and outlaws. Addison's Freeholder.

OFFICIAL.

OFF

OFFICIAL. adj. [official, Fr. from officius.]

1. Conducive; appropriate with regard to their use.

In this animal are the guts, the stomach, and other parts official unto nutrition, which, were its aliment the empty reception of air, their provisions had been superfluous. Brown.

2. Pertaining to a public charge.

The tribunes
Endue you with the people's voice, Remains
That in th' official marks invested, you Anon do meet the senate. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Official is that person to whom the cognizance of causes is committed by such as have ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Ayl.
A poor man found a priest over familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad and could not prove it, the priest sued him before the bishop's official for defamation. Camden.

OFFICIALTY. n. f. [officiality, Fr. from official.] The charge or post of an official.

The office of an official to an archdeacon. Ayliffe.
To OFFICIATE. v. a. [from officius.] To give, in consequence of office.

All her number'd stars that seem to rowl Spaces incomprehensible, for such
Their distance argues, and their swift return
Diurnal, merely to officiate light Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milton.

To OFFICIATE. v. n.

1. To discharge an office, commonly in worship.

No minister officiating in the church, can with a good conscience omit any part of that which is commanded by the afore said law. Sanderfon.

Who of the bishops or priests that officiates at the altar, in the places of their sepulchres, ever said we offer to thee Peter or Paul?

To prove curates no servants, is to rescue them from that contempt which they will certainly fall into under this notion; which considering the number of persons officiating this way, must be very prejudicial to religion. Collier.

2. To perform an office for another.

OFFICIAL. adj. [from officina, a shop.] Used in a shop, or belonging to it: thus official plants and drugs are those used in the shops.

OFFICIOUS. adj. [officius, Fr. officius, Lat.]

1. Kind; doing good offices.

Yet, not to earth are those bright luminaries Officious; but to thee, earth's habitant. Milt. P. Lest.

2. Importunately forward.

You are too officious
In her behalf that coars your services. Shakefp.
At Taunton they killed in fury an officious and eager commissioner for the subsidy. Bacon's Henry VII.

Cato, perhaps
I'm too officious, but my forward cares
Would fain preserve a life of so much value. Addison.

OFFICIOUSLY. adv. [from officius.]

1. Importunately forward.

The most corrupt are most obsequious grown,
And those they scorn'd, officiously they own. Dryden.

Flatt'ring crouds officiously appear,
To give themselves, not you, an happy year. Dryd.

2. Kindly; with unasked kindness.

Let thy goats officiously be nurs'd,
And led to living streams to quench their thirst. Dryd.

OFFICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from officius.]

1. Forwardness of civility, or respect, or endeavour. Commonly in an ill sense.

I shew my officiousness by an offering, though I betray my poverty by the measure. South's Serm.

2. Service.

In whom is required understanding as in a man, courage and vivacity as in a lion, service and ministerial officiousness as in the ox, and expedition as in the eagle. Brown's V. Err.

OFFING. n. f. [from off.] The act of steering to a distance from the land.

OFFSET. n. f. [off and set.] Sprout; shoot of a plant.

They are multiplied not only by the seed, but many also by the root, producing offsets or creeping under ground. Ray.

Some plants are raised from any part of the root, others by offsets, and in others the branches set in the ground will take root. Locke.

OFFSCOURING. n. f. [off and scour.] Recrement; part rubbed away in cleaning any thing.

Thou hast made us as the offscouring and refuse in the midst of the people. Lam. iii. 45.

OFFSPRING. n. f. [off and spring.]

1. Propagation; generation.

All things coveting to be like unto God in being ever, that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seem to continue itself by offspring and propagation. Hooker.

2. The thing propagated or generated; children; descendants.

OGL

When the fountain of mankind
Did draw corruption, and God's curse, by sin;
This was a charge, that all his heirs did bind,
And all his offspring grew corrupt therein. Devlin.

To the Gods alone
Our future offspring, and our wives are known. Dryd.
His principal actor is the son of a goddess, not to mention the offspring of other deities. Addison's Spectator.

3. Production of any kind.

Tho' both fell before their hour,
Time on their offspring hath no pow'r;
Nor fire nor fate their bays shall blatt,
Nor death's dark veil their days o'ercast. Danham.

To OFFUSCATE. v. a. [offusca, Lat. offuscar, Fr.] To dim; to cloud; to darken.

OFFUSCATION. n. f. [from offusca.] The act of darkening.

OFF. adv. [off, Saxon.] Often; frequently; not rarely; not seldom.

In labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. 2 Cor. ii. 23.

It may be a true faith, for so much as it is; it is one part of true faith, which is oft mistaken for the whole. Hamm.

Favours to none, to all the smiles extends,
Oft the rejects, but never once offends. Po. Ra. Lede.

OFFEN. adv. [from off, Saxon; in the comparative, often; superlative, oftneft.] Oft; frequently; many times; not seldom.

The queen that bore thee,
Oftner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died ev'ry day the liv'd. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities. 1 Tim. v. 23.

In journeying often, in perils in the wilderness. 2 Cor. ii. 20.

Who does not more admire Cicero as an author, than as a consul of Rome, and does not oftner talk of the celebrated writers of our own country in former ages, than of any among their contemporaries? Addison's Freeholder.

OFFENTIMES. adv. [often and times.] From the composition of this word it is reasonable to believe, that oft was once an adjective, of which often was the plural; which seems retained in the phrase thine often infirmities. See OFFEN.]

Frequently; many times; often.

Is our faith in the blessed trinity a matter needles, to be so oftentimes mentioned and opened in the principal part of that duty which we owe to God, our public prayer? Hooker.

The difficulty was by what means they could ever arrive to places oftentimes so remote from the ocean. Woodw.

It is equally necessary that there should be a future state, to vindicate the justice of God, and solve the present irregularities of providence, whether the best men be oftentimes only, or always the most miserable. Atterbury.

OFFTIMES. adv. [oft and times.] Frequently; often.

Oftimes nothing profits more Than self-elctem, grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Oftimes before I hither did resort,
Charm'd with the conversation of a man
Who led a rural life. Dryden and Lee.

OGEE. } n. f. Is a sort of moulding in architecture, consisting of a round and a hollow: it is almost in the form of an S, and is the same with what Vitruvius calls cimæ. Cima reversa, is an ogee with the hollow downwards. Harris.

To OGLE. v. a. [oggh, an eye, Dutch.] To view with idle glances, as in fondness; or with a design not to be headed.

From their high scaffold with a trumpet cheek,
And ogling all their audience, then they speak. Dryden.

If the female tongue will be in motion, why should it not be set to go right? Could they talk of the different aspects and conjunctions of the planets, they need not be at the pains to comment upon ogles and clandestine marriages. Addison's Guardian, N^o. 155.

Whom is he ogling yonder? himself in his looking-glass. Martinius Scribentius.

OGLER. n. f. [oggheler, Dutch.] A fly gazer; one who views by side glances.

Upon the disuse of the neck-piece, the whole tribe of oglers stared the fair sex in the neck rather than in the face. Addison's Guardian, N^o. 100.

Jack was a prodigious ogler; he would ogle you the outside of his eye inward, and the white upward. J. Bull.

OGLIO. n. f. [from olga, Spanish.] A dish made by mingling different kinds of meat; a medley; a hotchpotch.

These general motives of the common good, I will not so much as once offer up to your lordship, though they have still the upper end; yet, like great oglio's, they rather make a shew than provoke appetite. Suckling.

Where is there such an oglio or medley of various opinions in the world again, as those men entertain in their service, without any scruple as to the diversity of their sects and opinions? King Charles.

He

OIL

He that keeps an open house, should consider that there are oglio's & guests, as well as of dishes, and that the liberty of a common table is as good as a tacit invitation to all sorts of intruders. L'Estrange.

OH. interj. An exclamation denoting pain, sorrow, or surprise.

He,
Like stall acorn'd boar, a churning on,
Cry'd oh! and mounted. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
Oh m! all the horse have got over the river, what shall we do? Walton's Angler.

My eyes confess it,
My very action speaks my heart aloud;
Bubb, the madnels of my high attempt Speaks louder yet! Dryden's Spanish Friar.

OIL. n. f. [oel, Saxon; oleum, Latin.]

1. The juice of olives expressed.

2. Any fat, greasy, unctuous, thin matter.

3. The juices of certain vegetables, expressed or drawn by the still without fermentation, or after the spirit.

It with chemists called sulphur, is the second of their hypostatical, and of the true five chemical principles. It is an inflammable, unctuous, subtle substance, which usually rises at the spirit. The chemists attribute to this principle all the diversity of colours, and all the beauty and deformity.

It sweetens the acrimony of salts, and by stopping or filling the pores of a mixt body, keeps it longer from corruption, where it abounds. There are two sorts of oil which are to be mixt with spirit; for it can never be drawn pure, and which will swim upon water, such as oil of aniseed and yender, which the chemists call essential, and is commonly drawn in a limbeck with store of water: and another kind which probably is mixt with salts; and these will sink in water, such as the oil of guaiacum and cloves. Harris.

After this expressed oil, we made trial of a distilled one; and for that purpose made choice of the common oil or spirit. Boyle.

Oil. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear or lubricate with oil.

The men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled. Watson.

Amber will attract straws thus oiled, it will convert the needles of dials, made either of brass or iron, although they be much oiled, for in those needles confining fire upon their center there can be no adhesion. Brown's V. Err.

Swift oil many a spring which Harley moves. Swift.

OILCOLOUR. n. f. [oil and colour.] Colour made by grinding coloured substances in oil.

Oilecolours, after they are brought to their due temper, may be preserved long in some degree of softness, kept all the while under water. Boyle.

OILINESS. n. f. [from oil.] Unctuousness; greasiness; quality approaching to that of oil.

Basil hath fat and succulent leaves; which oiliness, if drawn forth by the sun, will make a very great change. Bacon.

Wine is inflammable, so as it hath a kind of oiliness. Bac.

Smoke from unctuous bodies and such whose oiliness is evident, he nameth nidior. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Chyle has the same principles as milk, viscosity from the caseous parts, an oiliness from the butyrous parts, and an acidity from the tartareous. Flyer.

The flesh of animals which live upon other animals, is most antiaid; though offensive to the stomach sometimes by reason of their oiliness. Arbutnot on Aliments.

OILMAN. n. f. [oil and man.] One who trades in oils and pickles.

OILSHOP. n. f. [oil and shop.] A shop where oils and pickles are sold.

OILY. adj. [from oil.]

1. Consisting of oil; containing oil; having the qualities of oil.

The like cloud, if it were oily or fatty, will not discharge; not because it sticketh faster, but because air preyeth upon water and flame, and fire upon oil. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Flame is grosser than gross fire, by reason of the mixture with it of that viscous oily matter, which, being drawn out of the wood and candle, serves for fuel. Digby.

Watry substances are more apt to putrify than oily. Bacon.

2. Fat; greasy.

This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's;
Go call him forth. Shakefp. Henry IV.

ORLYGRAIN. n. f. A plant.

The flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves without any footstalk; the flower cup consists of one leaf, divided into five long slender segments; the flower is of one leaf, in shape like those of the fox-glove; the pointal, which rises in the middle of the flower, afterward becomes an oblong four cornered pod, divided into four distinct cells, which are replete with excellent seeds. Miller.

OLD

OILPALM. n. f.

It grows in great plenty on the coast of Guiney, as also in Cape Verd island, where it grows as high as the main mast of a ship. But these trees have been transplanted to Jamaica and Barbados, in both which places they thrive very well.

The inhabitants make an oil from the pulp of the fruit, and draw a wine from the body of the trees, which inebriates; and with the rind of these trees they make mats to lie on. Miller.

To OINT. v. a. [oint, French.] To anoint; to smear with something unctuous.

They oint their naked limbs with mother'd oil,
Or from the founts where living sulphurs boil,
They mix a med'cine to foment their limbs. Dryden.

His fancy grows in the progress, and becomes on fire like a chariot wheel by its own rapidity. Pope. Pref. to Iliad.

16. Noting stipulation or condition.

I can be satisfied on more easy terms. Dryden.

ONC

18. Before it, by corruption, it stands for of.
This tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach on't. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A thriving gamester has but a poor trade on't, who fills his pockets at the price of his reputation. Locke's Educat.
19. Noting the manner of an event.
Note,
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden? Shakefp.
20. On, the same with upon. See UPON.
ON. adv.
1. Forward; in succession.
As he forbore one act, so he might have foreborn another, and after that another, and so on, till he had by degrees weakened, and at length mortified and extinguished the habit itself. South's Sermons.
If the tenant fail the landlord, he must fail his creditor, and he his, and so on. Locke.
These smaller particles are again composed of others much smaller, all which together are equal to all the pores or empty spaces between them; and so on perpetually till you come to solid particles, such as have no pores. Newt.
2. Forward; in progression.
On indeed they went; but oh! not far;
A fatal stop travers'd their head-long course. Daniel.
So saying, on he led his radiant files. Milton.
Hopping and flying, thus they led him on To the flow lake. Dryden.
What kindled in the dark the vital flame,
And ere the heart was form'd, push'd on the red'ning stream.
Blackmore on Creation.
Go to, I did not mean to chide you;
On with your tale. Rew's J. Shore.
3. In continuance; without ceasing.
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn. Crashaw.
Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd.
You roam about, and never are at rest;
By new desires, that is, new torments still possess:
As in a feverish dream you still drink on,
And wonder why your thirst is never gone. Dryden.
The peasants defy the sun; they work on in the hottest part of the day without intermission. Locke's Educat.
4. Not off.
5. Upon the body, as part of dress.
A long cloak he had on. Sidney.
Stiff in brocade, and pinch'd in stays,
Her patches, paint, and jewels on;
All day let envy view her face,
And Phyllis is but twenty-one. Prior.
6. It notes resolution to advance.
Since 'tis decreed, and to this period lead
A thousand ways, the noblest path we'll tread;
And bravely on, till they or we, or all,
A common sacrifice to honour fall. Denham.
ON. interj. A word of incitement or encouragement to attack; elliptically for go on.
Therefore on, or sweep your sword stark-naked; for meddle you must. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace,
By this one bloody trial of sharp war. Shakefp. R. III.
ONCE. adv. [from one.]
1. One time.
Trees that bear mast, are fruitful but once in two years;
the cause is, the expence of sap. Bacon.
Forthwith from out the ark a raven flies,
And after him the surer messenger,
A dove, sent forth once and again to spy
Green trees or ground. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
You came out like some great monarch, to take a town but once a year, as it were for your diversion, though you had no need to extend your territories. Dryden.
O virgin! daughter of eternal night,
Give me this once thy labour, to sustain
My right, and execute my just disdain.
In your tuneful lays,
Once more rebound the great Apollo's praise. Pope.
2. A single time.
Who this heir is, he does not once tell us. Locke.
3. The same time.
At once with him they rose:
Their rising all at once was as the found
Of thunder heard remote. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast,
And on the lips a burning kiss impress'd. Dryden.
Now that the fixed stars, by reason of their immense distance, appear like points, unless so far as their light is dilated by refraction may appear from hence, that when the

ONE

- moon passes over them and eclipses them, their light vanishes, not gradually like that of the planets, but all at once. Newt.
4. At a point of time indivisible.
Night came on, not by degrees prepared,
But all at once; at once the winds arise,
The thunders roll. Dryden's Cimon and Iphig.
5. One time, though no more.
Fulcius, those ill deeds that fully fame,
In blood once tainted, like a current run
From the lewd father to the lewder son. Dryden.
6. At the time immediate.
This hath all its force at once, upon the first impression, and is ever afterwards in a declining state. Atterbury.
7. Formerly; at a former time.
Thereon his arms and once-lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.
My foul had once some foolish fondness for thee,
But hence 'tis gone. Addison.
8. Once seems to be rather a noun than an adverb, when it has at before it, and when it is joined with an adjective: as, this once, that once.
ONE. adj. [an, cene, Saxon; een, Dutch; ein, German; εἷς, Greek.]
1. Less than two; single; denoted by an unite.
The man he knew was one that willingly,
For one good look would hazard all. Daniel.
Pindarus the poet, and one of the wisest, acknowledged also one God the most high, to be the father and creator of all things. Raleigh.
If one must be rejected, one succeed,
Make him my Lord, within whose faithful breast
Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best. Dryden.
Love him by parts in all your numerous race,
And from those parts form one collected grace;
Then when you have refin'd to that degree,
Imagine all in one, and think that one is he. Dryden.
2. Indefinitely; any.
We shall
Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days. Shakespeare.
I took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other. Shakespeare's Tempest.
When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and un-derstandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. Matt. xiii. 19.
If any one prince made a felicity in this life, and left fair fame after death, without the love of his subjects, there were some colour to despise it. Suckling.
3. Different; diverse; opposed to another.
What a precious comfort to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes. Shakespeare.
It is one thing to draw outlines true, the features like, the proportions exact, the colouring tolerable, and another thing to make all these graceful. Dryden.
Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile. Burnet.
It is one thing to think right, and another thing to know the right way to lay our thoughts before others with advantage and clearness. Locke.
My legs were clost together by so many wrappers one over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Add.
Two bones rubbed hard against one another, or with a file, produce a fetid smell. Arbutnot on Aliments.
At one time they keep their patients so warm, as almost to frost them, and all of a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue.
Baker on Learning.
4. One of two opposed to the other.
Ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this. Deist. iv. 32.
Both the matter of the stone and marchasite, had been at once fluid bodies, till one of them, probably the marchasite, first growing hard, the other, as being yet of a more yielding consistence, accommodated itself to the harder's figure. Boyle.
There can be no reason why we should prefer any one action to another, but because we have greater hopes of advantage from the one than from the other. Smallbridge.
5. Particularly one.
One day when Phæbe fair,
With all her band was following th' chase,
This nymph quite tir'd with heat of scorching air,
Sat down to rest. Fairy Queen, b. i.
6. Some future.
Heav'n waxeth old, and all the spheres above
Shall one day faint, and their swift motion stay;
And time itself, in time shall cease to move,
But the soul survives and lives for aye. Davies.
ONE. n. f. [There are many uses of the word one, which serve to denominate it a substantive, though some of them may seem rather to make it a pronoun relative, and some may perhaps

ONE

- perhaps be considered as consistent with the nature of an adjective.]
1. A single person.
If one by one you wedded all the world,
She you kill'd would be unparallel'd. Shakespeare.
Although the beauties, riches, honours, sciences, virtues, and perfections of all men were in the present possession of one, yet somewhat beyond and above all this there would still be fought and earnestly thirsted for. Hooker, b. i.
From his lofty steed he flew,
And raising one by one the suppliant crew,
To comfort each. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
When join'd in one, the good, the fair, the great,
Descends to view the muse's humble seat. Graville.
2. A single mass or aggregate.
It is one thing only as a heap is one. Blackmore.
3. The first hour.
Till 'tis one o'clock, our dance of custom
Let us not forget. Shakefp. M. Wives of Wind.
4. The same thing.
I marvel, why I answer'd not again;
But that's all one, omittance is no-quittance. Shakefp.
To be in the understanding, and not to be understood, is all one as to lay any thing is, and is not in the understanding. Locke.
5. A person.
A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in ranging human affairs. Watts's Logick.
6. A person by way of eminence.
Ferdinand
My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one,
The wisest prince that there had reign'd. Shakefp.
7. A distinct or particular person.
That man should be the teacher is no part of the matter;
for birds will learn one of another. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
No nations are wholly aliens and strangers the one to the other. Bacon's Holy War.
One or other fees a little box which was carried away with her, and so discovers her to her friends. Dryden.
8. Persons united.
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain:
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain. Shakefp.
9. Concord; agreement; one mind.
The king was well in structed how to carry himself between Ferdinand and Philip, resolving to keep themat one within themselves. Bacon's Henry VII.
He is not at one with himself what account to give of it.
Tillotson.
10. [On, on, French. It is used sometimes a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any person. For one the English formerly used men; as, they live obscurely men know not how, or do obscurely, men mark not when. Ascham. For which it would now be said, one knows not how, one knows not when; or, it is not known how.] Any person; any man indefinitely.
It is not so worthy to be brought to heroic effects by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney, b. ii.
One may be little the wiser for reading this dialogue, since it neither lets forth what Erona is, nor what the cause should be which threatens her with death. Sidney, b. ii.
One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease, affluence and power; not of one who had been just stripped of all those advantages. Atterbury.
For provoking of urine, one should begin with the gentlest first. Arbutnot on Aliments.
For some time one was not thought to understand Aristotle, unless he had read him with Averroes's comment. Baker.
11. A person of particular character.
Then must you speak
Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well;
Of one not easily jealous; but being wrought
Perplex'd in the extreme.
With lives and fortunes trusting one Who so discreetly us'd his own. Shakefp. Othello.
Edward I. was one that very well knew how to use a victory, as well as obtain it. Waller.
One who contemned divine and human laws. Hale.
12. One has sometimes a plural, either when it stands for persons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world; or when it relates to some thing going before, and is only the representative of the antecedent noun. This relative mode of speech, whether singular or plural, is in my ear not very elegant, yet is used by good authors.
Be not found here; hence with your little ones. Shakefp.
These successes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than such ruinous ones as are dyed in human blood.
Glaville's Scept. Pref.
He that will overlook the true reason of a thing which is but one, may easily find many false ones, error being infinite. Tillotson, Sermon. 1.

ONO

- The following plain rules and directions, are not the less useful because they are plain ones. Atterbury.
There are many whole waking thoughts are wholly employed on their sleeping ones. Addison's Spectator.
Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority limited by law. Addison's Freeholder.
This evil fortune which attends extraordinary men, hath been imputed to divers causes that need not be set down, when so obvious an one occurs, that when a great genius appears the dunces are all in conspiracy against him. Swift.
ONERED. adj. [one and eye.] Having only one eye.
A sign-post dauber wou'd disdain to paint
The once'd heron on his elephant. Dryden.
The mighty family
Of once'd brothers hasten to the shore. Addison.
ONIROCRITICAL. adj. [ὄνειρος and κριτικός, Gr. onirocritique, Fr. it should therefore according to analogy be written onirocritique and onirocritic.] Interpretative of dreams.
If a man has no mind to pass by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumstances, he may employ himself in that new kind of observation which my onirocritical correspondent has directed him to make. Addison's Spectator.
ONIROCRITICK. n. f. [ὄνειρος κρίτης, Gr.] An interpreter of dreams.
Having surveyed all ranks and professions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an onirocritick, or an interpreter of dreams. Addison's Spectator, No. 505.
ONENESS. n. f. [from one.] Unity; the quality of being one.
Our God is one, or rather very oneness and mere unity, having nothing but itself in itself, and not confisting, as all things do besides God, of many things. Hooker.
The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the feveral hypostases, is the one eternal indivisible divine nature, and the eternity of the son's generation, and his co-eternity, and his consubstantiality with the father when he came down from Heaven and was incarnate. Hammond.
ONERARY. adj. [onerarius, Lat. oneraire, Fr.] Fitted for carriage or burthens.
TO ONERATE. v. a. [onero, Lat.] To load; to burthen.
ONERATION. n. f. [from onerate.] The act of loading. Dict.
ONEROUS. adj. [onerous, Fr. onerous, Lat.] Burthenfome; oppressive.
A banished person, that is absent out of necessity, retains all things onerous to himself, as a punishment for his crime.
Ayliffe's Pargerson.
ONION. n. f. [oignon, French.]
It hath an orbicular, coated, bulbous root; the leaves are hollow or pip; the stalk also hollow and swells out in the middle; the flowers consisting of six leaves are collected into a spherical head; the style of the flower becomes a roundish fruit divided into three cells, containing roundish seeds. Mil.
If the boy have not a woman's gift
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well. Sha. Taming of the Shrew.
I an als, am onion-ey'd. Sha. Ant. and Cleopatra.
This is ev'ry cook's opinion,
No fav'ry dish without an onion:
But left your kissing should be spoil'd,
Your onions must be thoroughly boil'd. Swift.
ONLY. adj. [from one, only, or unlike.]
1. Single; one and no more.
Of all whom fortune to my sword did bring,
This only man was worth the conquering. Dryden.
2. This and no other.
The logic now in use has long possessed the chair, as the only art taught in the schools for the direction of the mind in the study of the sciences. Locke.
3. This above all other: as, he is the only man for music.
ONLY. adv.
1. Simply; singly; merely; barely.
I propose my thoughts only as conjectures. Burnet.
The posterity of the wicked inherit the fruit of their father's vices; and that not only by a just judgment, but from the natural course of things. Tillotson, Sermon. 4.
All who deserve his love, he makes his own;
And to be lov'd himself, needs only to be known. Dryd.
Nor must this contrition be exercised by us, only for grosser evils; but when we live the best. Wate.
2. So and no otherwise.
Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually. Gen. vi. 5.
3. Singly without more: as, only begotten.
ONOMANCY. n. f. [ὄνομα and μανία, Gr.] Divination by a name.
Definitions were superstitiously, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were suitable, and fatal necessities concurred herein with voluntary motion. Camden.
ONOMANTICAL. adj. [ὄνομα and μαντικός, Gr.] Predicting by names.
Theodatus, when curious to know the success of his wars against the Romans, an onomantical or name-wizard Jew, willed

ONY

willed him to shut up a number of swine and give some of them Roman names, others Gothish names with several marks, and there to leave them. Camden.

ONSET. n. f. [on and set.]

1. Attack; storm; assault; first brunt.

As well the soldier dieth, which standeth still, as he that gives the bravest onset. Sidney, b. ii.

All breathless, weary, faint,
Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,
And kindling new his courage, seeming quaint,
Struck him so hugely, that through great constraint
He made him stoop. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

The shout
Of battle now began, and rushing found
Of onset. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Sometimes it gains a point; and presently it finds itself baffled and beaten off; yet still it renews the onset, attacks the difficulty afresh; plants this reasoning and that argument, like to many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obdurate enclosed truth. South.

Without men and provisions it is impossible to secure conquests that are made in the first onsets of an invasion. Addison.

Observe
The first impetuous onsets of his grief;
Use every artifice to keep him steadfast. Philips.

2. Something added by way of ornamental appendage. This sense, says Nicholson, is still retained in Northumberland, where onset means a tuft.

I will with deeds requite thy gentleness;
And for an onset, Titus, to advance Thy name and honourable family, Shakespeare, Tit. And.

ONSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To set upon; to begin.

This for a while was hotly onsett and a reasonable price offered, but soon cooled again. Carew.

ONSLAUGHT. n. f. [on and slay. See SLAUGHTER.] Attack; storm; onset.

They made a halt
To view the ground, and where t' assault,
Then call'd a council, which was best,
By siege or onslaught to invest
The enemy; and 'twas agreed
By storm and onslaught to proceed. Hudibras, p. i.

ONTOLOGIST. n. f. [from ontology.] One who considers the affections of being in general; a metaphysician.

ONTOLOGY. n. f. [ὄν and λόγος.] The science of the affections of being in general; metaphysics.

The modes, accidents and relations that belong to various beings, are copiously treated of in metaphysics, or more properly ontology. Watts's Logic.

ONWARD. adv. [onward, Saxon.]

1. Forward; progressively.

My lord,
When you went onward on this ended action,
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye, Shakespeare.

Satan was now at hand, and from his feat
The monster moving onward came as fast,
With horrid strides. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Him thro' the spicy forest onward come
Adam discern'd, as in the door he sat
Of his cool bow'r. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Not one looks backward, onward still he goes, Pope.

2. In a state of advanced progression.

Philoxenus came to see how onward the fruits were of his friends labour. Sidney.

You are already so far onward of your way, that you have forsaken the imitation of ordinary converse. Dryden.

3. Somewhat farther.

A little onward lend thy guiding hand
To these dark steps, a little farther on. Milton.

ONYCHA. n. f. It is found in two different senses in scripture. — The odoriferous snail or shell, and the stone named onyx. The greatest part of commentators explain it by the onyx or odoriferous shell, like that of the shell-fish called purpura. The onyx is fished for in watry places of the Indies, where grows the spicanardi, which is the food of this fish and what makes its shell so aromatick. Calmet.

Take sweet spices, onycha, and galbanum. Ex. xxx. 34.

ONYX. n. f. [ὄνυξ.] The onyx is a semipellucid gem, of which there are several species, is the true onyx legitima, and the regular arrangement and disposition of its colours make amends for their want of show. Hill's Mat. Med.

Nor are her rare endowments to be sold,
For glittering sand by Ophir shewn,
The blue-eyed saphir, or rich onyx stone. Sandys.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: it is of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red: when on one or both sides the white,

OPE

there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish or fresh colour, the jewellers call the stone a fardonyx. Woodward on Fiss.

OOZE. n. f. [either from eaux, waters, French; or pæz, wetness, Saxon.]

1. Soft mud; mire at the bottom of water; slime.

My son i' th' ooze is bedded. Shakespeare, Temp.

Some carried up into their grounds the ooze or salt water mud, and found good profit thereby.

Old father Thames rais'd up his rev'rend head,
Deep in his ooze he fought his sedge bed,
And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

2. Soft flow; spring. This seems to be the meaning in Prior.

From his first fountain and beginning ooze,
Down to the sea each brook and torrent flows. Prior.

3. The liquor of a tanner's vat.

To OOZE. v. n. [from the noun.] To flow by stealth; to run gently; to drain away.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, even then
A wat'ry humour swell'd and ooze'd agen. Dryden.

Where creeping waters ooze,
Where marishes stagnate, and where rivers wind,
Clutter the rolling fogs. Thomson, Autumn.

The lilly drinks
The latent rill, scarce oozing thro' the grafs. Thomson.

O'OOZE. adj. [from ooze.] Mirey; muddy; slimy.

From his oozy bed,
Old father Thames advanc'd his rev'rend head. Pope.

To OPA'CAFE. v. a. [opaco, Lat.] To shade; to cloud; to darken; to obscure.

The same corpufcles upon the unstopping of the glaſs, did opacate that part of the air they moved in. Boyle.

OPA'CITY. n. f. [opacitas, Fr. opacitas, Lat.] Cloudiness; want of transparency.

Can any thing escape the perspicacity of those eyes in whose optics there is no opacity? Brown.

Had there not been any night, shadow or opacity, we should never have had any determinate conceit of darkness. Glanv.

How much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit is it to transmit the species. Ray on the Creation.

The least parts of almost all natural bodies, are in some measure transparent; and the opacity of those bodies ariseth from the multitude of reflexions cauled in their internal parts. Newt. Opt.

OPA'COUS. adj. [opacus, Latin.] Dark; obscure; not transparent.

When he perceives that these opacus bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal diffusion through the whole place that it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, and more subtle far than they, and consequently, divisible into lesser atoms; and having lesser pores, gives less scope to our eyes to miss light. Digby.

Upon the firm opacus globe
Of this round world, whose first convex divides
The luminous inferior orbs, inclos'd
From chaos, and th' inroad of darkness old, Satan alighted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

OPAL. n. f. The opal is a very elegant and a very singular kind of stone, it hardly comes within the rank of the pellucid gems, being much more opaque, and less hard. It is found always in the pebble shape of various sizes, from the head of a pin to the bigness of a walnut. It is naturally bright, smooth and glossy, and shows all its beauty without the help of the lapidary: in colour it much resembles the finest mother of pearl; its basis seeming a bluish or greyish white, but with a property of reflecting all the colours of the rainbow, as turned differently to the light, among which the green and the blue are particularly beautiful, but the fiery red is the finest of all. This stone is found in the East-Indies, in Egypt, Persia and Tartary, and in some parts of Europe, particularly in Bohemia; but the oriental is much the finest. Hill's Mat. Med.

Thy mind is a very opal. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

Th' empyreal heav'n, extended wide
In circuit, undetermin'd square or round;
With opal tow'rs, and battlements adorn'd
Of living saphir. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

We have this stone from Germany, and is the same with the opal of the ancients. Woodw. on Fiss.

OPA'QUE. adj. [opacus, Lat.] They Shot upward still direct, whence no way round Shadow from body opaque can fall. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The disappearing fixt stars were actually extinguished and turned into more opaque and gross planet-like bodies. Chene's Phil. Prin.

The tree whose operation brings Knowledge of good and ill, thence to taste. Milt. P. Lost.

If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses promoted by warmth, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit. Boyle.

The pain and sickness caused by manna, are the effects of its operation on the stomach and guts by the seize, motion and figure of its insensible parts. Locke.

2. Action; effect. Repentance and renovation consist not in the strife, with, or purpose, but in the actual operations of good life. Hamm.

OPI

That false fruit Far other operation first display'd, Carnal desire inflaming. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

Speculative painting, without the assistance of manual operation, can never attain to perfection, but slothfully languishes, for it was not with his tongue that Apelles performed his noble works. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

In this understanding piece of clock-work, his body as well as other senseless matter has colour, warmth and softness. But these qualities are not sufficient in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

3. [In chirurgery.] The part of the art of healing which depends on the use of instruments.

4. The motions or employments of an army.

OPERATIVE. adj. [from operare.] Having the power of acting; having forcible agency.

To be over curious in searching how God's all-piercing and operative spirit distinguishing gave form to the matter of the universal, is a search like unto his, who not contented with a known ford, will presume to pass over the greatest rivers in all parts where he is ignorant of their depths. Ral.

Many of the nobility endeavoured to make themselves popular, by speaking in parliament against those things which were most grateful to his majesty; and he thought a little discountenance upon those persons would suppress that spirit within themselves, or make the poison of it less operative upon others. Clarendon.

In actions of religion we should be zealous, active and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Taylor.

This circumstance of the promise must give life to all the rest, and make them operative toward the producing of good life. Decay of Piety.

It holds in all operative principles, especially in morality, in which, not to proceed, is certainly to go backward. South.

The will is the conclusion of an operative syllogism. Noel.

OPERATOR. n. f. [from operare, Fr. from operare.] One that performs any act of the hand; one who produces any effect.

An imaginary operator opening the first with a great deal of nicety, upon a cursory view appeared like the head of another. Addison's Spectator, No. 275.

To administer this dose, there cannot be fewer than fifty thousand operators, allowing one operator to every thirty. Swift.

OPEROSUS. adj. [from operosus, Latin.] Laborious; full of trouble and tediousness.

Such an explication is purely imaginary, and also very operose, and would affect a great part of the universe; they would be as hard put to it to get rid of this water, when the deluge was to cease, as they were at first to procure it. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Written language, as it is more operous, so it is more digested, and is permanent. Holder.

OPHIOPHAGOUS. adj. [from ὄφις and φαγῶν.] Serpenteating. Not used.

To OPINE. v. n. [from opinor, Latin.] To think; to judge; to be of opinion.

Fear is an ague, that forsakes And haunts by fits those whom it takes; And they'll opine they feel the pain And blows they felt to-day, again. Hudibras, p. i.

In matters of mere speculation, it is not much material to the welfare of government, or of themselves, whether they opine right or wrong, and whether they be philosophers or no. South's Sermon.

But I, who think more highly of our kind, Opine, that nature, as in duty bound, Deep hid the shining mischief under ground. Pope.

OPINATIVE. adj. [from opinor.]

1. Stiff in a preconceived notion.

2. Imagined; not proved.

It is the more difficult to find out truth, because it is in such inconsiderable proportions scattered in a mass of opinitive uncertainties; like the silver in Hiero's crown of gold. Glanv. Scept. c. 9.

OPINATOR. n. f. [from opinatus, French.] One fond of his own notion; inflexible; adherent to his own opinion.

What will not opinators and self-believing men dispute of and make doubt of? Raleigh.

Eliza left lord Roberts governor; a man of a four and forty nature, a great opinitor, and one who must be overcome before he would believe that he could be so. Clarendon.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition; as it is pity but all such political opinitors should. South's Sermon.

OPINATRE. adj. [French.] Obstinate; stubborn.

Instead of an able man, you desire to have him an insignificant wrangler, opinitre in discourse, and priding himself in contradicting others. Locke.

OPINATRETY. n. f. [from opinatretis, French.] Obstinate; inflexibility; determination of mind; stubbornness. This word, though it has been tried in different forms, is not yet received, nor is it wanted.

Let popular opinitry should arise, we will deliver the chief opinions. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.

The one sets the thoughts upon wit and false colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opinitry. Locke's Education.

So much as we ourselves consider and comprehend of truth and reason, so much we possess of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, make us not one jot the more knowing, though they happen to be true: what in them was science, is in us but opinitry. Locke.

I can pass by opinitry and the busy meddling of those who thrust themselves into every thing. Woodw. Letters.

I was extremely concerned at his opinitry in leaving me; but he shall not get rid so. Pope.

OPINION. n. f. [from opinio, Fr. opinio, Lat.]

1. Persuasion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge. Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination, but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. Ben. Johnson.

Opinion is, when the assent of the understanding is so far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one persuasion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting. Hale.

Stiff in opinion, ever in the wrong. Dryden.

Bleed be the princes who have fought For pompous names, or wide dominion, Since by their error we are taught, That happiness is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgment; notion. Can they make it out against the common sense and opinion of all mankind, that there is no such thing as a future state of misery for such as have lived ill here. South.

Charity itself commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendship, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend. South's Sermons.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning heirs, that where there are divers children the eldest son has the right to be heir. Locke.

Philosophers are of opinion, that infinite space is possessed by God's infinite omnipotence. Locke.

I shall conclude my paper with a story out of Boccacini, which sufficiently shews us the opinion that judicious author entertained of the sort of critics I have been here mentioning. Addison's Spectator, No. 291.

OPO

3. Favourable judgment. In actions of arms small matters are of great moment, especially when they serve to raise an opinion of commanders. Hayward.

Howsoever I have no opinion of those things; yet so much I conceive to be true, that strong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate. Bacon.

To OPINION. v. a. [from the noun.] To opine; to think. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.

The stoicks opinioned the souls of wise men dwell about the moon, and those fools wandered about the earth: whereas the Epicureans held that death was nothing, nor after death: Brown's V. Err.

That the soul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, is generally opinioned. Glanv. Scept. c. xiii.

It is opinioned, that the earth rests as the world's centre; while the heavens are the subject of the universal motions. Glanv. Scept. c. xi.

OPINIONATIVE. adj. [from opinion.] Fond of preconceived notions; stubborn.

Striking at the root of pedantry and opinionative assurance, would be no hindrance to the world's improvement. Glanv.

OPIPAROUS. adj. [from opiparus, Lat.] Sumptuous. Diä.

OPITULATION. n. f. [from opitulation, Lat.] An aiding; a helping. Diä.

OPPIUM. n. f. A juice, partly of the resinous, partly of the gummy kind. It is brought to us in flat cakes or masses, usually of a roundish figure, very heavy and of a dense texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark brownish yellow; its smell is very unpleasant, of a dead faint kind; and its taste very bitter and very acrid. It is brought from Natolia, from Egypt, and from the East-Indies, where it is produced from the white garden poppy; a plant of which every part is full of a milky juice, and with which the fields of Asia-Minor are in many places sown as ours are with corn. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet soft, green and full of juice, incisions are made in them, and from every one of these a few drops flow of a milky juice, which soon hardens into a solid consistence. These drops are gathered with great care, and the finest opium proceeds from the first incisions. In the countries where opium is produced, multitudes are employed in preparing it with water, honey and spices, and working it up into cakes; but what we generally have is the mere crude juice, or at most worked up with water, or a small quantity of honey sufficient to bring it into form. The ancients were greatly divided about the virtues and use of opium; some calling it a poison, and others the greatest of all medicines. At present it is in high esteem, and externally applied it is emollient, relaxing and discutient, and greatly promotes suppuration. A moderate dose of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet custom will make people bear a dram as a moderate dose; but in that case nature is vitiated. Its first effect is the making the patient cheerful, as if he had drank moderately of wine; it removes melancholy, excites boldness, and dissipates the dread of danger; and for this reason the Turks always take it when they are going to battle in a larger dose than ordinary: it afterward quiets the spirits, eases pain, and disposes to sleep. After the effect of a dose of opium is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the spirits, which had been elevated by it, become lower than before, and the pulse languid. An immoderate dose of opium brings on a sort of drunkenness, cheerfulness and loud laughter, at first, and, after many terrible symptoms, death itself. Those who have accustomed themselves to an immoderate use of opium, are subject to relaxations and weaknesses of all the parts of the body; they are apt to be faint, idle and thoughtless, and are generally in a stupid and uncomfortable state, except just after they have taken a fresh dose: they lose their appetite, and in fine grow old before their time. Hill.

Sleep hath forsook and giv'n me o'er To death's benumbing opium as my only cure. Milton.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporific or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke.

OPPLE-TREE. n. f. [from opple and tree.] A sort of tree. Ainsl.

OPOBALSAMUM. n. f. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPOPONAX. n. f. [Latin.] A gum resin of a tolerably firm texture, in small loose granules, and sometimes in large masses, which are impure. It is of a strong disagreeable smell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taste. It is brought to us from OPPILATIVE. adj. [opilative, Fr.] Obstructive.

OPPLET'D. adj. [oppletus, Lat.] Filled; crowded.

OPPO'NENT. adj. [opponens, Lat.] Opposite; adverse.

Ere the foundations of this earth were laid,
It was opponent to our search ordain'd,
That joy, still fought, should never be attain'd. Prior.

OPPO'NENT. n. f. [opponents, Lat.]

1. Antagonist; adversary.
2. One who begins the dispute by raising objections to a tenet.

Inasmuch as ye go about to destroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impose on us that which we think not ourselves bound unto; that therefore ye are not to claim in any conference other than the plaintiffs or opponents part. Hooker.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator. More.

OPPORTUNE. adj. [opportune, Fr. opportunus, Latin.] Seasonable; convenient; fit; timely; well-timed; proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's felicity, being at the top of all worldly bliss, and the perpetual constancy of his prosperous successes, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune. Bacon.

Will lift us up in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat; perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence with neighb'ring arms
And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Consider'd every creature, which of all
Most opportune might serve his wiles; and found
The serpent subtlest beast of all the field. Milton.

OPPORTUNELY. adv. [from opportune.] Seasonably; conveniently; with opportunity either of time or place.

He was resolv'd to chuse a war rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being situate to opportune to annoy England either for coast or trade. Bacon's Henry VII.

Against these there is a proper objection, that they offend uniformity; whereof I am therefore opportune induced to say somewhat. Wotton's Architecture.

This experiment does opportune supply the deficiency. Boyle.

OPPORTUNITY. n. f. [opportunitas, Fr. opportunitas, Lat.] Fit fit place; time; convenience; suitability of circumstances to any end.

A wife man will make more opportunities than he finds.
Mens behaviour should be like their apparel, not too straight but free for exercise. Bacon, Essay 53.

Opportunity, like a sudden gust,
Hath swell'd my calmer thoughts into a tempest.
Accur'd opportunity!
That work't our thoughts into desires, desires
To resolutions; those being ripe and quicken'd, Thou giv'st them birth, and bring'st them forth to action. Denham.

Tho' their advice be good, their counsel wise,
Yet length still loses opportunities.
Neglect no opportunity of doing good, nor check thy desire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen. Atterb.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long descriptions of the night. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

To OPPOSE. v. a. [opposere, French; oppono, Latin.]

1. To act against; to be adverse; to hinder; to resist.

There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuousness: and my desire
All continent impediments would o'erbear,
That did oppose my will. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. To put in opposition; to offer as an antagonist or rival.

If all men are not naturally equal, I am sure all slaves are; and then I may, without presumption, oppose my single opinion to his. Locke.

3. To place as an obstacle.

Since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me

OPP

Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

I thro' the seas puri'd their evil'd race,
Engag'd the heav'n's, oppos'd the stormy main;
But billows roar'd and tempests rag'd in vain. Dryden.

OPPO'SER. n. f. [from opposere.] One that opposes; antagonist; enemy; rival.

Now the fair goddess fortune
Fall deep in love with thee, and her great charms
Misguide thy opposers swords: bold gentleman!
Prosperity be thy page. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Brave wits that have made essays worthy of immortality;
yet by reason of envious and more popular opposers, have submitted to fate, and are almost lost in oblivion. Glouce.

I do not see how the ministers could have continued in their stations, if their opposers had agreed about the methods by which they should be ruined. Swift.

A hardy modern chief,
A bold opposer of divine belief. Blackmore.

OPPOSITE. adj. [opposite, Fr. oppositus, Lat.]

1. Placed in front; facing each other.

He
Cry'd oh! and mounted; found no opposition
From what he look'd for should oppose. Shakespeare.

Virtue which breaks thro' all opposition,
And all temptation can remove,
Most shines, and most is acceptable above. Milton.

He considers Lausus rescuing his father at the hazard of his own life, as an image of himself when he took Anchises on his shoulders, and bore him safe thro' the rage of the fire and the opposition of his enemies. Dryden's Dunciad.

3. Contrariety of affection.

They who never tried the experiment of a holy life, measure sure the laws of God not by their intrinsical goodness, but by the reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts. Tillotson, Sermon 6.

OPP

4. Contrariety of interest; contrariety of measures.
5. Contrariety of meaning; diversity of meaning.

The parts of every true opposition do always both concern the same subject, and have reference to the same thing, fith otherwise they are but in shew opposite, and not in truth. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.

Reason can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident, nor allow it to enter into probability in opposition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

To OPPRESS. v. a. [oppressus, Lat.]

1. To crush by hardship or unreasonable severity.

Israel and Judah were oppressed together, and all that took them captives held them fast, they refused to let them go. Jer. l. 33.

Alas! a mortal moist oppress of those Whom fate has loaded with a weight of woes. Pope.

2. To overpower; to subdue.

We're not ourselves,
When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body. Shakespeare. King Lear.

OPPRESSION. n. f. [oppression, Fr. from oppressere.]

1. The act of oppressing; cruelty; severity.
2. The state of being oppressed; misery.

Famine is in thy cheeks;
Need and oppression stare within thine eyes,
Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back. Shakespeare.

Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.

3. Hardship; calamity.

We are all subject to the same accidents; and when we see any under particular oppression, we should look upon it as the common lot of human nature. Addis. Spectator.

4. Dullness of spirits; lassitude of body.

Drouiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbutnot on Aliment.

OPPRESSIVE. adj. [from oppressere.]

1. Cruel; inhuman; unjustly exacting or severe.
2. Heavy; overwhelming.

Alicia, reach thy friendly arm,
And help me to support that feeble frame,
That nodding totters with oppressive wees,
And sinks beneath its load. Roscoe's Jane Shore.

OPPRESSOR. n. f. [oppressor, Fr. from oppressere.] One who harasses others with unreasonable or unjust severity.

I from oppressors did the poor defend,
The fatherless, and such as had no friend. Sandys.

The cries of orphans, and th' oppressor's rage,
Had reach'd the stars. Dryden.

Power when employed to relieve the oppressed, and to punish the oppressor, becomes a great blessing. Swift.

OPPROBRIOUS. adj. [from opprobrium, Lat.] Reproachful; disgraceful; causing infamy; scurrilous.

Himself pronounceth them blessed, that should for his name fake be subject to all kinds of ignominy and opprobrious malediction. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.

I will not here defile
My unstain'd verse with his opprobrious name. Daniel.

Solomon he led by fraud to build
His temple right against the temple of God,
On the opprobrious hill. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

They see themselves unjustly aspersed, and vindicate themselves in terms no less opprobrious than those by which they are attacked. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 137.

OPPROBRIOUSLY. ad. [from opprobrious.] Reproachfully; scurrilously.

Think you, this little prating York

OPTICIAN. n. f. [from optick.] One skilled in opticks.

OPTICK. adj. [ὀπτικός, Gr. optique, Fr.]

1. Visual; producing vision; subservient to vision.

May not the harmony and discord of colours arise from the proportions of the vibrations propagated through the fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, as the harmony and discord of sounds arise from the proportions of the vibrations of the air? Newton. Opt.- 2. Relating to the science of vision.

Where our master handleth the contractions of pillars, we have an optic rule, that the higher they are the less should be always their diminution aloft, because the eye itself doth naturally contract all objects, according to the distance. Wotton's Architecture.

OPTICK. n. f. An instrument of sight; an organ of sight.

Can any thing escape the perspicacity of those eyes which were before light, and in whose opticks there is no opacity. Brown.

Our corporeal eyes we find Dazzle the opticks of our mind. Denham.

You may neglect, or quench, or hate the flame,
Whose smoke too long obscur'd your rising name,
And quickly cold indiff'rence will ensue,
When you love's joys thro' honour's optick view. Prior.

Why has not man a microscopick eye?
For this plain reason, man is not a fly.
Say what the use, were finer opticks giv'n,
T'inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n. Pope.

OPTICK. n. f. [ὀπτική, Gr.] The science of the nature and laws of vision.

stroyed or to stand eternally?
 He my muse's homage thou'd receive,
 If I could write or Holles could forgive.
 Every thing that can be divided by the mind into two or more ideas, is called complex.
 It corresponds to either; he must either fall or fly.
 Or is sometimes redundant; but is then more properly omitted.
 How great soever the sins of any unreformed person are, Christ died for him because he died for all; only he must reform and forsake his sins, or else he shall never receive benefit of his death.
 [Or, or aye, Saxon.] Before; or ever, is before ever.
 Or we go to the declaration of this psalm, it shall be convenient to shew who did write this psalm.
 The dead man's knell
 Is there scarce ask'd for whom, and good men's lives
 Expire before the flowers in their caps,
 Dying or ere they sicken.
 Learn before thou speak, and use physick or ever thou be sick.
 OR. n. f. [French.] Gold.
 With lifted colours gay, or, azure, gules,
 Delights and puzzles the beholders eyes.

There are thirteen species; of which the first called garden orach, was cultivated as a culinary herb, and used as spinach, though it is not generally liked by the English, but still esteemed by the French. It was formerly used in medicine.
 ORACLE. n. f. [oracle, Fr. oraculum, Lat.]
 1. Something delivered by supernatural wisdom.
 The main principle whereupon our belief of all things therein contained dependeth, is, that the scriptures are the oracles of God himself.
 2. The place where, or person of whom the determinations of heaven are enquired.
 Why, by the verities on thee made good,
 May they not be my oracles as well,
 And set me up in hope?
 God hath now sent his living oracle
 Into the world to teach his final will,
 And sends his spirit of truth henceforth to dwell
 In pious hearts, an inward oracle,
 To all truth requisite for men to know.
 3. Any person or place where certain decisions are obtained.
 There mighty nations shall enquire their doom,
 The world's great oracle in times to come.
 4. One famed for wisdom; one whose determinations are not to be disputed.

 The gentiles.
 ORACULAR. adj. [from oracle.] Uttering oracles; resembling oracles.
 Thy counsel would be as the oracle of Urim and thummim, those oraculous gems
 On Aaron's breast, or tongue of seers old Infallible.
 Here Charles contrives the ord'ring of his states,
 Here he resolves his neighb'ring princes fates;
 What nation shall have peace, where war be made,
 Determin'd is in this oraculous shade.
 Though their general acknowledgments of the weakness
 Of human understanding look like cold and sceptical discouragements;
 yet the particular expressions of their sentiments are as oraculous as if they were omniscient.
 They have something venerable and oracular, in that unadorned gravity and shortness in the expression.
 Th' oraculous seer frequents the Pharian coast,
 Proteus a name tremendous o'er the main.
 ORACULOUSLY. adv. [from oraculous.] In manner of an oracle.
 The testimony of antiquity, and such as pass oraculously amongst us, were not always so exact as to examine the doctrine they delivered.
 Hence rise the branching beech and vocal oak,
 Where Jove of old oraculously spoke.
 ORACULOUSNESS. n. f. [from oracular.] The state of being oracular.
 ORATION. n. f. [oratio, Fr. oratio, Lat.] Prayer; verbal supplication; or oral worship: more frequently written orison.
 Stay, let's hear the oraisons he makes.
 Business might shorten, not disturb her pray'r;
 Heav'n had the best, if not the greater share:
 An active life, long oraisons forbids,
 Yet still the pray'r, for still the pray'r by deeds.

ORA

ORAL. adj. [oral, Fr. oral, Latin.] Delivered by mouth; not written.
 Oral discourse, whose transient faults dying with the sound that gives them life, and so not subject to a strict review, more easily escapes observation.
 St. John was appealed to as the living oracle of the church; and as his oral testimony lasted the first century, many have observed, that by a particular providence several of our Saviour's disciples, and of the early converts, lived to a very great age, that they might personally convey the truth of the gospel to those times which were very remote.
 ORALLY. adv. [from oral.] By mouth; without writing.
 Oral tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws of a kingdom, because they are complex, not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages.
 ORANGE. n. f. [orange, Fr. aurantia, Latin.] The leaves have two lobes or appendages at their base like ears, and cut in form of a heart; the fruit is round and depressed, and of a yellow colour when ripe, in which it differs from the citron and lemon. The species are eight.
 I will discharge it in your straw-colour'd beard, your orange tawny beard.
 The notary came aboard, holding in his hand a fruit like an orange, but of colour between orange tawny and scarlet, which cast a most excellent odour, and is used for a preservative against infection.
 Fine oranges, sauce for your veal,
 Are charming when squeezed in a pot of brown ale.
 The ideas of orange colour and azure, produced in the mind by the same infusion of lignum nephriticum, are no less distinct ideas than those of the same colours taken from two different bodies.

 ORATION. n. f. [oration, Fr. oratio, Lat.] A speech made according to the laws of rhetoric; a harangue; a declamation.
 There shall I try,
 In my oration, how the people take
 The cruel issue of these bloody men.
 This gives life and spirit to every thing that is spoken, awakens the dullest spirits, and adds a singular grace and excellency both to the person and his oration.
 ORATORICAL. adj. [from orator.] Rhetorical; befitting an orator.
 Where he speaks in an oratorical, affecting, or persuasive way, let this be explained by other places where he treats of the same theme in a doctrinal way.
 ORATOR. n. f. [orateur, Fr. orator, Lat.]
 1. A public speaker; a man of eloquence.
 Poor queen and son! your labour is but lost;
 For Warwick is a subtle orator.
 As when of old some orator renowned,
 In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute! to some great cause address'd, Stood in himself collected; while each part,
 Motion, each act, won audience.
 The constant design of both these orators in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point.
 I have listened to an orator of this species, without being able to understand one single sentence.
 Both orators so much renowned,
 In their own depths of eloquence were drown'd.
 2. A petitioner. This sense is used in addresses to chancery.
 ORATORY. n. f. [oratoria, Fr. oratio, Lat.]
 1. Eloquence; rhetorical skill.
 Each pasture stored with sheep feeding with sober security, while the pretty lambs with bleating oratory craved the dams comfort.
 When a world of men
 Could not prevail with all their oratory,
 Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rul'd.
 When my oratory grew tow'rd end,
 I bid them that did love their country's good,
 Cry, God save Richard.
 Sighs now breath'd
 Unutterable, which the spirit of pray'r
 Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
 Than loudest oratory.
 By this kind of oratory and professing to decline their own inclinations and wishes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over those who were full surprised.
 The former who had to deal with a people of much more politeness, learning, and wit, laid the greatest weight of his oratory upon the strength of his arguments.

ORB

Come harmless characters, that no one hit,
 Come Henley's oratory, Osborn's wit.
 2. Exercise of eloquence.
 The Romans had feised upon the fleet of the Antiates, among which there were six armed with rostra, with which the consul Menenius adorned the publick place of oratory.
 3. [Oratoire, French.]
 Oratory signifies a private place, which is deputed and allotted for prayer alone, and not for the general celebration of divine service.
 They began to erect to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner, which neither was possible by reason of the poor estate of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them.
 Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; nor thy duty for want of temporal encouragements.
 ORB. n. f. [orbis, Fr. orbis, Latin.]
 1. Sphere; orbicular body; circular body.
 A mighty collection of water inclosed in the bowels of the earth, constitutes an huge orb in the interior or central parts; upon the surface of which orb of water the terrestrial strata are expanded.
 The orb
 Of his fierce chariot roll'd as with the sound
 Of torrent floods.
 4. Circle; line drawn round.
 Circle described by any of the mundane spheres.
 Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricities and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs, though no such things were.
 With smiling aspect you serenely move,
 In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love.
 6. Period; revolution of time.
 Self-begot, self-raised,
 By our own quick'ning pow'r, when fatal course
 Had circled his full orb, the birth mature
 Of this our native heav'n.
 7. Sphere of action.
 Will you again unknot
 This churlish knot of all abhorred war,
 And move in that obedient orb again,
 Where you did give a fair and nat'ral light.
 8. It is applied by Milton to the eye, as being luminous and spherical.
 A drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
 Or dim suffusion veil'd.
 ORBATION. n. f. [orbatus, Lat.] Privation of parents or children.
 ORBED. adj. [from orb.]
 1. Round; circular; orbicular.

 ORD. n. f. An edge or sharpness; as in ordhelm, ordbright, &c. and in the Islandish tongue, ord signifies a spear or dart. Gib, Ord, in old English, signified beginning; whence probably the proverbial phrase odds [ords] and ends, for scraps or remnants.
 To ORDAIN. v. a. [ordaino, Lat. ordonner, Fr.]
 1. To appoint; to decree.
 Know the cause why musick was ordain'd;
 Was it not to refresh the mind of man
 After his studies, or his usual pain?
 Jeroboam ordain'd a feast.
 He hath also prepared for him the instruments of death;
 he ordaineth his arrows against the persecutors.
 As many as were ordained to eternal life, believed.
 He commanded us to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead.
 The fatal tent,
 The scene of death, and place ordain'd for punishment.
 To souls oppress'd and dumb with grief,
 The Gods ordain this kind relief,
 That musick should in sounds convey
 What dying lovers dare not say.
 My reason bends to what thy eyes ordain;
 For I was born to love, and thou to reign.
 2. To establish; to settle; to institute.
 Ordain'd our laws, whose use the sword of Cæsar
 Hath too much mangled.
 I will ordain a place for Israel.
 God from Sinai descending, will himself
 In thunder, lightning, and loud trumpets sound, Ordain them laws.
 For thee I have ordain'd it, and Have suffer'd, that the glory may be thine
 Of ending this great war; since none but thou
 Can end it.
 Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
 Of holy senates, and elect by voice.
 3. To set in an office.
 All signified unto you by a man, who is ordained over the affairs, shall be utterly destroyed.
 4. To invest with ministerial function, or sacerdotal power.

ORD

5. Mandate; precept; command.
Give order to my servants, that they take
No note of our being absent. Shakefp. Mer. of Ven.
If the lords of the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, presently some nobleman deputed by the tables published a protestation against those orders and proclamations.
Clarendon.
Upon this new fright, an order was made by both houses for disarming all the papists in England; upon which, and the like orders, though seldom any thing was after done, yet it served to keep up the apprehensions in the people, of dangers and designs, and to disincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen. Clarendon.
I have received an order under your hand for a thousand pounds in words at length. Tatler, N^o. 60.
6. Rule; regulation.
The church hath authority to establish that for an order at one time, which at another time it may abolish, and in both do well. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
7. Regular government.
The night, their number, and the sudden act
Would dash all order, and protect their fact. Daniel.
8. A society of dignified persons distinguished by marks of honour.
Elves,
The several chairs of order look you scour,
With juice of balm and ev'ry precious flow'r. Shakefp.
Princes many times make themselves desir'd, and let their hearts upon toys; sometimes upon a building; sometimes upon erecting of an order. Bacon.
She left immortal trophies of her fame,
And to the noblest order gave the name. Dryden.
By shining marks, distinguish'd they appear,
And various orders various enigms bear. Granville.
9. A rank, or class.
The king commanded the high priest and the priests of the second order, to bring forth out of the temple all the vessels. 2 Kings xxiii. 4.
Th' Almighty seeing,
From his transcendent seat the faints among,
To those bright orders utter'd thus his voice. Milton.
10. A religious fraternity.
Find a bare foot brother out,
Here visiting the sick. Shakefp. Rom. and Juliet.
11. [In the plural.] Hierarchical state.
If the faults of men in orders are only to be judged among themselves, they are all in some sort parties. Dryden.
Having in his youth made a good progress in learning, that he might dedicate himself more intirely to religion he entered into holy orders, and in a few years became renown'd for his sanctity of life. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 164.
12. Means to an end.
Virgins must remember, that the virginity of the body is only excellent in order to the purity of the soul; for in the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
We should behave reverently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly towards men; and in order to the better discharge of these duties, we should govern ourselves in the use of sensual delights, with temperance. Tillotson, Sermon 6.
The best knowledge is that which is of greatest use in or- der to our eternal happiness. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
What we see is in order only to what we do not see; and both these states must be joined together. Atterbury.
One man pursues power in order to wealth, and another wealth in order to power, which last is the safer way, and generally followed. Swift's Exam. N^o. 27.
13. Measures; care.
It were meet you should take some order for the soldiers, which are now first to be discharged and disposed of some way; which may otherwise grow to as great inconvenience as all this that you have quit us from. Spenser on Ireland.
Provide me soldiers, Shakefp.
Whilst I take order for mine own affairs.
The money promised unto the king, he took no order for, albeit Soltratus required it. 2 Mac. iv. 27.
If any of the family be distressed, order is taken for their relief and competent means to live. Bacon.
14. [In architecture.] A system of the several members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilasters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, especially those of a column; so as to form one beautiful whole: or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which some of the parts ought to have, on the account of the proportions that are given them.
There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek,
viz. the doric, ionic, and corinthian; and two Italian, viz.
the tuscan and composite. The whole is composed of two parts at least, the column and the entablature, and of four

ORD

- parts at the most; where there is a pedestal under the columns, and one acroter or little pedestal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts; the base, the shaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the several orders.
In the tuscan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called diameters, by diameters is meant the thickness of the shaft at the bottom, the pedestal having two; the column with base and capital, seven;
and the entablature one and three quarters.
In the doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedestal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.
In the ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having two and two thirds,
the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.
In the corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having three, the column nine and a half, and the entablature two.
In the composite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedestal having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.
In a colonnade or range of pillars, the intercolumniation or space between columns in the tuscan order, is four diameters.
In the doric order, two and three quarters; in the ionic or- der, two and a quarter; in the corinthian order, two; and in the composite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

by the occasion of other bodies, whereof there is an infinite store, so orderly keep their cells without any alteration of site. Gloucester.
In the body, when the principal parts, the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferior smaller vessels act orderly

ORD

- orderly* and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. South's Sermon.
O'RDINABLE. adj. [ordino, Lat.] Such as may be appointed.
All the ways of oeconomy God hath used toward a rational creature, to reduce mankind to that course of living which is most perfectly agreeable to our nature, and by the mercy of God ordinable to eternal bliss. Hamm.
O'RDINAL. adj. [ordinalis, Fr. ordinalis, Lat.] Noting order:
as, second, third.
The moon's age is thus found, add to the exact the day of the month and the ordinal number of that month from March inclusive, because the exact begins at March, and the sum of those, casting away thirty or twenty-nine, as often as it ariseth, is the age of the moon. Halder.
O'RDINAL. n. f. [ordinal, Fr. ordinale, Latin.] A ritual; a book containing orders. Ains.
O'RDINANCE. n. f. [ordnance, French.]

by the wind and flood. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

O'REAL. n. f. Lees of wine. Ainsl.

ORGAN. n. f. [organe, Fr. ὄργανον.]
1. Natural instrument; as the tongue is the organ of speech, the lungs of respiration.
When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The ever lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit,
Than when the liv'd indeed. Shakespeare.
For a mean and organ, by which this operative virtue might be continued, God appointed the light to be united,
and gave it also motion and heat. Raleigh.
The aptness of birds is not so much in the conformity of the organs of speech, as in their attention. Bacon.
Wit and will
Can judge and chuse, without the body's aid;
Tho' on such objects they are working still,
As thro' the body's organs are convey'd. Davies.

2. An instrument of musick consisting of pipes filled with wind and of stops, touched by the hand. [Orgue, Fr.]
A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes in the world, and making every one found a particular note. Keil.
While in more lengthen'd notes and flow,
The deep, majestic, solemn organs blow. Pope.

ORGANICAL. } adj. [organique, Fr. organicus, Lat.]
ORGANICK. }
1. Consisting of various parts co-operating with each other.
He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.
He with serpent tongue
Organick, or impulse of vocal air,
His fraudulent temptation thus began. Milt. P. Lost.
The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they live and move and are vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent being. Bentley's Sermons.

Boyle on Colours.

ORGANIZATION. n. f. [from organize.] Construction in which the parts are so disposed as to be subservient to each other.
Every man's senses differ as much from others in their figure, colour, site, and infinite other peculiarities in the organization, as any one man's can from itself, through divers accidental variations. Glanv. Sceps. c. xxv.
That being then one plant, which has such an organization of parts in one coherent body, partaking of one common life, it continues to be the same plant, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, in a like continued organization. Locke.

TO ORGANIZE. v. a. [organiser, Fr. from organ.] To construct so as that one part co-operates with another; to form organically.
As the soul doth organize the body, and give unto every member thereof that substance, quantity, and shape, which nature seeth most expedient, so the inward grace of sacraments may teach what ferveth best for their outward form.

ORI

Hooker, b. v. f. 58.

A genial and cherishing heat so acts upon the fit and obsequious matter, wherein it was harboured, as to organize and fashion that disposed matter according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.
Those nobler faculties in the mind, matter organized could never produce. Ray on the Creation.
The identity of the same man consists in a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.

ORGANLOFT. n. f. [organ and loft.] The loft where the organs stand.
Five young ladies of no small fame for their great severity of manners, would go no where with their lovers but to an organloft in a church, where they had a cold treat and some few opera songs. Tatler, No. 61.

ORGANPIPE. n. f. [organ and pipe.] The pipe of a musical organ.
The thunder,
That deep and dreadful organpipe pronounc'd
The name of Prosper. Shakespeare's Tempest.

ORGANUM. n. f. [organum, Lat.] An herb. Ainsl.

ORGASM. n. f. [orgasme, Fr. ὄργασμος.] Sudden vehemence.
By means of the curious lodgment and inoculation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be allayed, and perturbations of the mind quieted. Derham's Physico-Theol.

ORGEIS. n. f. A sea-fish, called likewise organling. Both seem a corruption of the orkenyling, as being taken on the Or-keny coast. Ainsl.

ORGILLOUS. adj. [orgueilleux, French.] Proud; haughty.
From idles of Greece
The princes orgilious, their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships. Shakep.

ORGIES. n. f. [orgies, Fr. orgia, Lat.] Mad rites of Bacchus; frantick revels.
These are nights
Solemn to the shining rites,
Of the fairy prince and knights,
While the moon their orgie lights. Ben. Johnson.
She feign'd nocturnal orgies; left my bed,
And mix'd with Trojan dames, the dances led. Dryd.

ORICHALC. n. f. [orichalcum, Lat.] Brass.
Not Bilbo steel, nor brass from Corinth fet,
Nor costly orichalc from strange Phoenice,
But such as could both Phœbus' arrows ward,
And th' hailing darts of heav'n beating hard. Spenser.

O'RIENT. adj. [orientis, Latin.]
1. Rising as the sun.
Moon that now meet'st the orient sun, now fly'st
With the fix'd stars. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
When fair morn orient in heav'n appear'd. Milton.

2. Eastern; oriental.
3. Bright; shining; glittering; gaudy; sparkling.
The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again transform'd to orient pearl;
Advantaging their loan with interest,
Ofentimes double gain of happiness. Shakep.
There do breed yearly an innumerable company of gnats, whose property is to fly unto the eye of the lion, as being a bright and orient thing. Abbot on the World.
We have spoken of the cause of orient colours in birds;
which is by the fineness of the frainer. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Morning light
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws
O'er the blue firmament a radiant white. Milton.
In thick shelter of black shades imbrow'd,
He offers to each weary traveller
His orient liquor in a crystal glass,
To quench the drouth of Phœbus. Milton.
The chiefs about their necks the futecheons wore,
With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er. Dryden.

O'RIENT. n. f. [orient, Fr.] The east; the part where the sun first appears.

O'RIENTAL. adj. [oriental, French.] Eastern; placed in the east; proceeding from the east.
Your ships went as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to Pequin upon the oriental seas, as far as to the borders of the east Tartary. Bacon's New Atlantis.
Some ascribing hereto the generation of gold, conceive the bodies of this situation to receive some appropriate influence from the sun's ascendent, and oriental radiations.
Brown's Vulgar Err. b. vi.

O'RIENTAL. n. f. An inhabitant of the eastern parts of the world.
They have been of that great use to following ages, as to be imitated by the Arabians and other orientals. Grew.

O'RIENTALISM. n. f. [from oriental.] An idiom of the eastern languages; an eastern mode of speech.

ORIENTALITY.

ORI

O'RIENTALITY. n. f. [from oriental.] State of being oriental.
His revolution being regular, it hath no power nor efficacy peculiar from its orientality, but equally disperseth his beams.
Brown's V. Err. b. vi.

O'RIFICE. n. f. [orifice, Fr. orificium, Lat.] Any opening or perforation.
The prince of Orange, in his first hurt by the Spanish boy, could find no means to stanch the blood, but was fain to have the orifice of the wound stopp'd by men's thumbs, succeeding one another for the space of two days. Bacon.
Their mouths
With hideous orifice gap'd on us wide, Portending hollow truce. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
Etna was bored through the top with a monstrous orifice. Addison's Guardian, No. 103.

O'RIFLAMB. n. f. [probably a corruption of auriflamma, Lat.
or flamma d'or, Fr. in like manner as orpiment is corrupted.]
A golden standard. Ainsl.

O'RIGAN. n. f. [origan, Fr. origanum, Lat.] Wild marjorum.
I saw her in her proper hue,
Bathing herself in origan and thyme. Fairy Queen.

O'RIGIN. } n. f. [origine, Fr. origo, Lat.]
O'RIGINAL. }
1. Beginning; first existence.
The sacred historian only treats of the origins of terrestrial animals. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Fountain; source; that which gives beginning or existence.
Nature which contains its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself. Shakep. King Lear.
If any station upon earth be honourable, theirs was; and their posterity therefore have no reason to blush at the memory of such an original. Aurbury.
Original of beings! pow'r divine!
Since that I live and that I think, is thine. Prior.
These great orbs,
Primitive founts, and origins of light. Prior.

3. First copy; archetype; that from which any thing is transcribed or translated. In this sense origin is not used.
Compare this translation with the original, and the three first stanzas are rendered almost word for word, and not only with the same elegance, but with the same turn of expression.
Addison's Spectator, No. 229.

External material things, as the objects of sensation; and the operations of our minds within, as the objects of reflection; are the only originals from whence all our ideas take their beginnings. Locke.

4. Derivation; descent.
They, like the seed from which they sprung, accrue
Against the gods immortal hatred nurst;
An impious, arrogant, and cruel brood,
Expressing their original from blood. Dryden.

O'RIGINAL. adj. [originalis, Fr. originalis, Latin.] Primitive; pristine; first.
The original question was, whether God by this law hath forbidden the giving any worship to himself by an image?
Stillingfleet on Idolatry.
Had Adam obeyed God, his original perfection, the knowledge and ability God at first gave him, would still have continued. Wake's Prop. for Death.
You still, fair mother, in your offspring trace
The flock of beauty destin'd for the race;
Kind nature, forming them the pattern took;
From heav'n's first work, and Eve's original look. Prior.

O'RIGINALLY. adv. [from original.]
1. Primarily; with regard to the first cause.
A very great difference between a king that holdeth his crown by a willing act of estates, and one that holdeth it originally by the law of nature and descent of blood. Bacon.
A present blessing upon our fests, is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smallbridge's Sermons.

2. At first.
The metallic and mineral matter, found in the perpendicular intervals of the strata, was originally, and at the time of the deluge, lodged in the bodies of those strata. Woodw.

3. As the first author.
For what originally others writ,
May be so well diguiss'd and so improv'd,
That with some justice it may pass for yours. Roscomm.

O'RIGINALNESS. n. f. [from original.] The quality or state of being original.

O'RIGINARY. adj. [originaire, Fr. from origin.]
1. Productive; causing existence.
The production of animals in the originary way, requires a certain degree of warmth, which proceeds from the sun's influence. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

2. Primitive; that which was the first state.
Remember I am built of clay, and must Resolve to my originary dust. Sandy's Par. on Job.

ORP

TO O'RIGINATE. v. a. [from origin.] To bring into existence.

ORIGINATION. n. f. [originatio, Lat. from originate.] The act of bringing into existence; first production.
The tradition of the origination of mankind seems to be universal; but the particular methods of that origination ex-cogitated by the heathen, were particular. Hale.
This crua is propagated by animal parents, to wit, butterflies, after the common origination of all caterpillars. Ray.
Descartes first introduced the fancy of making a world, and deducing the origination of the universe from mechanical principles. Keil.

O'RISONS. n. f. [oraison, French: this word is variously accented; Shakespeare has the accent both on the first and second syllables; Milton and Crashaw on the first, others on the second.] A prayer; a supplication.
Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all thy sins remember'd. Shakep. Hamlet.
Alas! your too much love and care of me,
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch. Shakep.
He went into St. Paul's church, where he had orisons and Te Deum sung. Bacon's Henry VII.
My wakeful lay shall knock
At th' oriental gates, and duly mock
The early larks thrill orisons, to be An anthem at the day's nativity. Crashaw.
His daily orisons attract our ears. Sandys on Job.
Lowly they bow'd, adoring, and began Their orisons, each morning duly paid. Milton.
So went he on with his orisons,
Which, if you mark them well, were wise ones. Cotton.
Here at dead of night
The hermit oft, mid his orisons, hears Aghast the voice of time disparting tow'rs. Dyer.

O'RIOP. n. f. [overloop, Dutch.] The middle deck. Shimm.
A small ship of the king's called the Penfie, was assailed by the Lyon, a principal ship of Scotland; wherein the Penfie so applied her shot, that the Lyon's oriop was broken, her sails and tackling torn; and lastly, she was boarded and taken. Hoyward.

O'ORNAMENT. n. f. [ornamentum, Lat. ornament, Fr.]
1. Embellishment; decoration.
So may the outward shows be least themselves;
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament. Shakep.
The Tutan chief, to me has sent Their crown, and every regal ornament. Dryden.
No circumstances of life can place a man so far below the notice of the world, but that his virtues or vices will render him, in some degree, an ornament or disgrace to his profession. Rogers, Sermon 9.

2. Honour; that which confers dignity.
The persons of different qualities in both sexes, are indeed allowed their different ornaments; but these are by no means costly, being rather designed as marks of distinction than to make a figure. Addison on Italy.

O'ORNAMENTAL. adj. [from ornament.] Serving to decoration;
giving embellishment.
Some think it most ornamental to wear their bracelets on their wrists, others about their ancles. Brown.
If the kind be capable of more perfection, though rather in the ornamental parts of it, than the essential, what rules of morality or respect have I broken, in naming the defects that they may hereafter be amended? Dryden.
Even the Heathens have esteem'd this variety not only ornamental to the earth, but a proof of the wisdom of the creator. Woodw. Nat. Hist.
If no advancement of knowledge can be had from universities, the time there spent is lost; every ornamental part of education is better taught elsewhere. Swift on Religion.

O'ORNAMENTALLY. adv. [from ornamental.] In such a manner as may confer embellishment.

O'ORNAMENTED. adj. [from ornament.] Embellished; bedecked.

O'ORNATE. adj. [ornatus, Lat.] Bedecked; decorated; fine.
What thing of sea or land,
Female of sex it seems,
That so bedeck'd, ornate and gay,
Comes this way sailing. Milton's Agonistes.

O'ORNATENESS. n. f. [from ornate.] Finery; state of being embellished.

O'ORNATURE. n. f. [ornatus, Lat.] Decoration. Ainsl.

O'ORNYSOPIST. n. f. [ὄρνις and ὁπσις.] One who examines the flight of birds in order to foretell futurity.

O'ORNITHOLOGY. n. f. [ὄρνις and λόγος.] A discourse on birds.

O'ORPHAN. n. f. [ὄρφανος; orphanus, Fr.] A child who has lost father or mother, or both.
Poor orphan in the wide world scattered,
As budding branch rent from the native tree,
And thrown forth until it be withered:
Such is the state of man. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To reave the orphan of his patrimony, 185

To

ORT

To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shakefp.
Sad widows, by thee rified, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.
The sea with spoils his angry bullets throw,
Widows and orphans making as they go. Waller.
Pity, with a parent's mind,
This helpless orphan whom thou leav'st behind. Dryden.
ORPHAN. adj. [orphelin, Fr.] Bereft of parents.
This king left orphan both of father and mother, found his estate, when he came to age, so disjointed even in the the noblest and strongest limbs of government, that the name of a king was grown odious. Sidney, b. ii.
ORPHANAGE. n. f. [orphelinage, Fr. from orphan.] State of an orphan.
ORPIMENT. n. f. [auripigmentum, Lat. orpiment, orpin, Fr.]
True and genuine orpiment is a foliaceous fossil, sometimes found in masses of two or three inches diameter, and one inch in thickness; but it is oftener met with in smaller con-geries of flakes from an eighth of an inch to a third in diameter, lodged in zarnich. See ZARNICH. It is of a fine and pure texture, remarkably heavy, and its colour is a bright and beautiful yellow, like that of gold. It is not hard but very tough, easily bending without breaking: some have declared orpiment to be only mulcovy talk, stained by accident. But talk is always elastic, but orpiment not so; talk also remains unaltered in the strongest fire, whereas orpiment melts readily, and as readily burns away. Orpiment has been supposed to contain gold, and is found in mines of gold, silver, and copper, and sometimes in the strata of marl.
It is frequent in the East-Indies and the Turkish dominions, the finest coming from Smyrna. We have it also in Germany and Saxony. The ancients were well acquainted with this drug, which they called arsenicon; and though they were utterly unacquainted with the poisonous substance called arsenick, yet orpiment has been by some very unjustly deemed a poison; but it appears to be an innocent medicine which the ancients prescribed internally. The painters are very fond of it as a gold colour. Hill's Mat. Med.
For the golden colour, it may be made by some small mixture of orpiment, such as they use to brats in the yellow alchemy; it will easily recover that which the iron loseth. Bacon.
ORPHANOTROPHY. n. f. [ὀρφανὸς and τροφή.] An hospital for orphans.
ORPINE. n. f. [orpin, Fr.] Liverer or rose root, anacampserus, Telephum, or Rhodia radis. A plant. It hath a rose shaped flower, consisting of several leaves placed orbicularly; out of whose many-leaved empalement rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a three-cornered fruit, consisting of one cell, which is filled with roundish seeds: the leaves are placed alternately on the branches. It is a low plant, whose branches trail on the ground; the leaves are small and roundish, of a glaucous colour, and of a pretty thick confidence. The flowers are small, and of a whitish green colour. Miller.
Cool violets and orpine growing still,
Embathed balm and cheerful galingale. Spenser.
ORRERY. n. f. An instrument which by many complicated movements represents the revolutions of the heavenly bodies.
It was first made by Mr. Rowley, a mathematician born at Litchfield, and so named from his patron the earl of Orrery:
by one or other of this family almost every art has been encouraged or improved.
ORRIS. n. f. [orris, Latin.] A plant and flower.
It hath no leaves to the flower, but consists of many flamina arising from a five-leaved empalement. The pointal becomes the seed, which is flat and orbicular, and inclosed in the empalement, which becomes a foliaceous capsule, in which are included two sorts of seeds. Miller.
The nature of the orris root is almost singular; for roots that are in any degree sweet, it is but the same sweetness with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not sweet in the leaf;
neither is the flower any thing so sweet as the root. Bacon.
ORRIS. n. f. [old Fr.] A sort of gold or silver lace.
ORTS. n. f. seldom with a singular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ort, German, the fourth part of any thing;
by Mr. Lye more reasonably from orda, Irish, a fragment.
In Anglo Saxon, ord signifies the beginning; whence in some provinces odd and ends; for ords and ends signify remnants, scattered pieces, refuse; from ord thus used probably came ort.] Refuse; things left or thrown away.
He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;
A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds
On abject orts and imitations. Shakefp. Jul. Cæs.
The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
Of her o'er eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes. Shakefp.
Much good do't you then;
Brave plush and velvet men,
Can feed on orts and safe in your stage-cloths;
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The flagers, and the stage-wrights too. Ben. Johnson.

OSC

ORTHODOX. adj. [ὀρθός and δοξία; orthodox, Fr.] Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical.
Be you persuaded and settled in the true protestant religion professed by the church of England; which is as found and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any Christian church in the world. Bacon.
Eternal bliss is not immediately superfructed on the most orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour saith, if ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them; the doing must be first superfructed on the knowing or believing, before any happines can be built on it. Hammend.
ORTHODOXY. adv. [from orthodox.] With soundness of opinion.
The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so foundly and so orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to the honour of our religion. Bacon.
ORTHODOXY. n. f. [ὀρθόδοξία; orthodoxie, Fr. from orthodox.]
Soundness in opinion and doctrine.
I do not attempt explaining the mysteries of the christian religion, since Providence intended there should be mysteries, it cannot be agreeable to piety, orthodoxy, or good sense, to go about it. Swift.
ORTHODROMICKS. n. f. [from ὀρθόδρομος and δρόμος.] The art of sailing in the ark of some great circle, which is the shortest or straightest distance between any two points on the surface of the globe. Harris.
ORTHODROMY. n. f. [ὀρθόδρομος and δρόμος.] Fr. from orthodox.]
Sailing in a straight course.
ORTHOGON. n. f. [ὀρθός and γωνία.] A rectangled figure.
The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments; your cylinder for vaulted turrets and round buildings; your orthogon and pyramid, for sharp steeples. Peach.
ORTHOGONAL. adj. [orthogonels, Fr. from orthogon.] Rectangular.
ORTHOGRAPHER. n. f. [ὀρθός and γραφία.] One who spells according to the rules of grammar.
He was wont to speak plain, like an honest man and a soldier; and now he is turn'd orthographer, his words are just so many strange difhes. Shakefp. Lear.
ORTHOGRAPHICAL. n. f. [from orthography.]
1. Rightly spelled.
2. Relating to the spelling.
I received from him the following letter, which, after having rectified some little orthographical mistakes, I shall make a present of to the public. Addison's Spectator.
3. Delineated according to the elevation, not the ground-plot.
In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation and the just dimensions of each face, and of what belongs to it. Mortimer's Eluq.
ORTHOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from orthographical.]
1. According to the rules of spelling.
2. According to the elevation.
ORTHOGRAPHY. n. f. [ὀρθός and γραφία.] orthographie, Fr.]
1. The part of grammar which teaches how words should be spelled.
This would render languages much more easy to be learned, as to reading and pronouncing, and especially as to the writing them, which now as they stand we find to be troublesome, and it is no small part of grammar which treats of orthography and right pronunciation. Holder.
2. The art or practice of spelling.
In London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs;
all which reduced to writing, would entirely confound ortho- graphy. Swift.
3. The elevation of a building delineated.
You have the orthography or upright of this ground-plot, and the explanation thereof with a scale of feet and inches.
Moxon's Mech. Exer.
ORTHOPNOEA. n. f. [ὀρθόπνοια; orthopnoia, Fr.] A disorder of the lungs, in which respiration can be performed only in the upright posture.
His disease was an asthma oft turning to an orthopnoea; the cause a translocation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey on Consumption.
ORTIVE. adj. [ortive, Fr. ortivus, Lat.] Relating to the rising of any planet or star.
ORTOLAN. n. f. [French.] A small bird accounted very delicious.
Not ortolans nor godwits. Cowley.
ORVAL. n. f. [orvale, Fr. orvala, Lat.] The herb clary. Diët.
ORVETAN. n. f. [orvietano, Italian; so called from a moun-tebank at Orvieto in Italy.] An antidote or counter poison;
a medicinal composition or electuary, good against poison.
Bailey.
OSCHEOCELE. n. f. [ὀσχεον and κύλη.] A kind of hernia when the intestines break into the scrotum. Diët.
OSCILLATION. n. f. [oscillum, Latin.] The act of moving backward and forward like a pendulum.
OSCILLATORY. adj. [oscillum, Lat.] Moving backwards and forwards like a pendulum. The

OST

The actions upon the solids are stimulating or increasing their vibrations, or oscillatory motions. Arbutnot.
OSCITANCY. n. f. [oscitantia, Lat.]
1. The act of yawning.
2. Unusual sleepiness; carelessness.
If persons of so circumspect a piety, have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wretches' oscitancy?
Government of the Tongue.
It might proceed from the oscitancy of transcribers, who,
to dispatch their work the sooner, used to write all numbers in cyphers. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 470.
OSCITANT. adj. [oscitans, Latin.]
1. Yawning; unusually sleepy.
2. Sleepy; sluggish.
Our oscitant lazy piety gave vacancy for them, and they will now lend none back again for more active duty.
Decay of Piety.
OSCITATION. n. f. [oscito, Lat.] The act of yawning.
I shall defer considering this subject till I come to my treatise of oscitation, laughter, and ridicule. Tatler, N^o. 63.
OSIER. n. f. [osier, French.] A tree of the willow kind, growing by the water, of which the twigs are used for basket-work.
The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place. Shak.
Ere the sun advance his burning eye,
I must fill up this osier cage of ours
With baleful weeds and precious juiced flowers. Shakefp.
Bring them for food sweet boughs and osiers cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay rick shut. May's Virg.
Like her no nymph can willing osiers bend,
In basket-works, which painted breaks commend. Dryd.
Along the marshes spread,
We made the osier fringed bank our bed. Po. Odyss.
OSMUND. n. f. A plant. It is sometimes used in medicine.
It grows upon bogs in divers parts of England. Miller.
OSPRAY. n. f. [corrupted from offspring, Latin.] The sea-eagle, of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air, all the fish in the water turn up their bellies, and lie still for him to seize which he pleases. Hammer.
I think he'll be to Rome
As is the ospray to the fish who takes it,
By sovereignty of nature. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Among the fowls shall not be eaten, the eagle, the ossifrage, and the ospray. Numbers xi. 13.
OSSELET. n. f. [French.] A little hard substance arising on the inside of a horse's knee, among the small bones; it grows out of a gummy substance which fastens those bones together. Parvier's Dict.
OSSICLE. n. f. [ossiculum, Latin.] A small bone.
There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whose right constitution depends the due tension of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muscle, which serves to draw one of these ossicles, fixt to the tympanum, be lost or abated, the tension of that membrane ceasing, sound is hindered from coming into the ear. Holder on Speech.
OSSIFICK. adj. [ossa and facio, Lat.] Having the power of making bones, or changing caraneous or membranous to bony substance.
If the caries be superficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments consume the moisture in the caries, dry the bone, and dispose it, by virtue of its ossific faculty, to thrust out a callus, and make separation of its caries. Wifeman.
OSSIFICATION. n. f. [from ossify.] Change of caraneous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony substance.
Ossifications or indurations of the artery, appear so constantly in the beginnings of aneurisms, that it is not easy to judge whether they are the cause or the effect of them. Sharp.
OSSIFRAGE. n. f. [ossifraga, Lat. ossifrage, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whose flesh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The ossif- raga or ospray, is thus called, because it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is said to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occasion that the Latins called it avis bustoria. Culmet.
Among the fowls shall not be eaten the eagle and the ossifrage, and the ospray. Numb. xi. 13.
TO OSSIFY. v. a. [ossa and facio.] To change to bone.
The dilated aorta every where in the neighbourhood of the cyst is generally ossified. Sharp's Surgery.
OSSIVOROUS. adj. [ossa and voros.] Devouring bones.
The bore of the gullet is not in all creatures alike answerable to the body or stomach; as in the fox, which feeds on bones, and swallows whole, or with little chewing;
and next in a dog and other ossivorous quadrupeds, it is very large. Derham's Physico-Theol.
OSTIARY. n. f. [ostiarium, Lat.] A charnel house; a place where the bones of dead people are kept. Diët.
OST. n. f. A vessel upon which hops or malt are dried. Diët.
OSTENSIVE. adj. [ostentis, Fr. ostendo, Lat.] Showing; betokening.

OST

OSTENT. n. f. [ostentum, Latin.]
1. Appearance; air; manner; mien.
Use all th' observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent,
To please his grandam. Shakefp. Merch. of Ven.
2. Show; token. These senses are peculiar to Shakespeare.
Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair ostents of love
As shall conveniently become you there. Shakefp.
3. A portent; a prodigy; any thing ominous.
Latinus, frighted with this dire ostent,
For counsel to his father Faunus went;
And fought the shades renown'd for prophecy,
Which near Alburnia's sulph'rous fountain lie. Dryden.
OSTENTATION. n. f. [ostentatio, Fr. ostentatio, Lat.]
1. Outward show; appearance.
If these shows be not outward, which of you But is four Volcians? —
—March on my fellows;
Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
You are come
A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented
The ostentation of our love. Shakespeare.
2. Ambitious display; boast; vain show. This is the usual sense.
If all these secret springs of detraction fail, yet a vain ostentation of wit sets a man on attacking an established name, and sacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of those about him. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 256.
He knew that good and bountiful minds were sometimes inclined to ostentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, says he, that you do not your alms before men, to be seen. Atterbury.
3. A show; a spectacle. Not in use.
The king would have me present the prince's with some delightful ostentation, show, pageant, antick, or firework.
Shakespeare's Love's Lab. Lost.
OSTENTATIOUS. adj. [ostento, Latin.] Boastful; vain; fond of show; fond to expose to view.
Your modesty is so far from being ostentatious of the good you do, that it blushes even to have it known; and therefore I must leave you to the satisfaction of your own conscience, which, though a silent panegyrick, is yet the best. Dryden.
They let Ulysses into his disposition, and he seems to be ignorant, credulous, and ostentatious. Broom on the Odyss.
OSTENTATIOUSLY. adv. [from ostentatious.] Vainly; boastfully.
OSTENTATIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ostentatious.] Vanity; boastfulness.
OSTENTATOIR. n. f. [ostentateur, Fr. ostento, Lat.] A boaster;
a vain fatterer to show.
OSTEOCOLLA. n. f. [ὀστέον and κόλλα; ostecolla, Fr.] Osteocolla is frequent in Germany, and has long been famous for bringing on a callus in fractured bones; but the present practice with us takes no notice of it. Hill's Mat. Med.
Osteocolla is a spar, generally coarse, concreted with earthy or stony matter, precipitated by water, and incrustured upon sticks, stones, and other like bodies. Woodward.
OSTEOCOPE. n. f. [ὀστέον and κόπε; ostecope, Fr.] Pains in the bones, or rather in the nerves and membranes that encompass them. Diët.
OSTEOLOGY. n. f. [ὀστέον and λόγος; osteologie, Fr.] A description of the bones.
Richard Farloc, well known for his acuteness in dissection of dead bodies, and his great skill in osteology, has now laid by that practice. Tatler, N^o. 62.
OSTIARY. n. f. [ostium, Lat.] The opening at which a river disembogues itself.
It is generally received, that the Nilus hath seven ostiaries, that is, by seven channels disburtheneth itself unto the sea.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.
OSTLER. n. f. [hofslietier, French.] The man who takes care of horses at an inn.
The smith, the ostler, and the boot-catcher, ought to partake. Swift's Direct. to the Groom.
OSTLERY. n. f. [hofslerie, French.] The place belonging to the ostler.
OSTRACISM. n. f. [ὀστρακισμός; ostracisme, Fr.] A manner of passing sentence, in which the note of acquital or condemnation was marked upon a shell which the voter threw into a vessel. Banishment; publick censure.
Virtue in courtiers hearts
Suffers an ostracism, and departs;
Profit, ease, fitness, plenty, bid it go,
But whither, only knowing you, I know. Donne.
Publick envy is as an ostracism, that eclipseth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bridle to keep them within bounds. Bacon's Essays, N^o. 9.
Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce
The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use. Cleveland.
This

OTH

This man, upon a slight and false accusation of favouring arbitrary power, was banished by ostracism; which in English would signify, that they voted he should be removed from their presence and council for ever. Swift.

OSTRACITES. n. f. Ostracites expresses the common oyster in its fossil state, under whatever circumstances it has been petrified. Hill's Mat. Med.

OSTRICH. n. f. [autruche, Fr. struthio, Lat.] Ostrich is ranged among birds. It is very large, its wings very short, and the neck about four or five spans. The feathers of its wings are in great esteem, and are used as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are stained of several colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of course, for they never fly; but use their wings to assist them in running more swiftly. The ostrich swallows bits of iron or brass, in the same manner as other birds will swallow small stones or gravel, to assist in digesting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the sand, and the sun hatches them. Calmet.

I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakefp.
Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich. Job xxxix. 13.

The Scots errant fight, and fight to eat,
Their ostrich stomachs make their swords their meat. Cleav.
Modern ostriches are dwindled to meek larks, in comparison with those of the ancients. Arbutnot.

OTACOUSSTICK. n. f. [otaz and otazé; otacoustique, Fr.] An instrument to facilitate hearing.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is supplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacoustick, is directed backward, as to receive the smallest and most distant sound that comes behind her. Grew's Colomat. b. i.

OTHER. pron. [oðen, Sax. autre, Fr.]

1. Not the same; not this; different.

Of good actions some are better than other some. Hooker.
Will it not be received

That they have don't, Shakefp. K. Lear.

Who dares receive it other?
He that will not give just occasion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beasts, where the strongest carries; and so lay a foundation for perpetual disorder and mischief, tumult, sedition and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypothesis so loudly cry out against, must of necessity find out another state of government. Locke.

No leaves shall ever be made other than leaves for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion or remainder. Swift.

2. Not I, or he, but some one else.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels and this other's house. Shakefp.

Physicians are some of them so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the true cure of the disease; and some other are so regular in proceeding according to art, as they respect not the condition of the patient. Bacon, Essay 31.

The dismayed matrons and maidens, some in their houses, other some in the churches with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard distress. Knalles.

The king had all he crav'd, or could compel,
And all was done—let others judge how well. Daniel.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controlling worth in goodness, that the will cannot but like and desire it; and on the other side, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itself to the affections of mankind, but under the disguise of the other. Saunders.

4. Correlative to each.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Phil. ii. 3.

Scotland and thou did each in other live,
Nor would'st thou her, nor could she thee survive. Dryden.

5. Something besides.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can. Locke on Education, f. 169.

6. The next.

Thy air,
Thou other gold bound brow, is like the first;
A third is like the former. Shakefp. Macbeth.

7. The third part.

Bind my hair up: as 'twas yesterday:
No, nor the other day. Ben. Johnson.

8. It is sometimes put elliptically for other thing; something different.

I can expect no other from those that judge by single fights and rash measures, than to be thought fond or insolent. Glavin.

OTHERGATES. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

OVE

If fir Toby had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.

OTHERGUISE. adj. [other and guise.] This is often mistaken, and sometimes written otherguist. Of another kind.

OTHERWHERE. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had access to the temple and synagogues, but as Christians they were of necessity forced otherwhere to assemble themselves. Hooker, b. v. f. 11.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce,
And former sufferings, otherwhere are found. Milton.

OTHERWHILE. adv. [other and while.] At other times.

OTHERWISE. adv. [other and wise.]

1. In an indifferent manner.

They only plead, that whatsoever God revealeth, as necessary for all Christian men to do and believe, the same we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwise, which no man denieth. Hooker, b. i.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the same thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or else otherwise, without any breach of duty at all. Hooker, b. iv. f. 13.

In these good things, what all others should practise, we should scarce know to practise otherwise. Speat.

Thy father was a worthy prince,
And merited, alas! a better fate;
But heaven thought otherwise. Addison's Cato.

2. By other causes.

Sir John Norris failed in the attempts of Lisborn, and returned with the loss, by sickness and otherwise, of eight thousand men. Raleigh.

3. In other respects.

It is said truly, that the best men otherwise, are not always the best in regard of society. Hooker, b. i.

Men seldom consider God any otherwise than in relation to themselves, and therefore want some extraordinary benefits to excite their attention and engage their love. Roger.

OTTER. n. f. [otter, Saxon.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fish.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better swimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine; and in his tail, which is felin, or a long taper: so that he may not be unjustly called putorius aquaticus, or the water pole-cat. He makes himself burrows on the water side, as a beaver; is sometimes tamed and taught, by nimbly surrounding the fishes to drive them into the net. Grew.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's skin stuffed with hay. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 115.

Would you preserve a numerous finny race?
Let your fierce dogs the ravenous otter chase;
Th' amphibious monster ranges all the shores,
Darts thro' the waves, and every haunt explores. Gow.

OVAL. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, an egg.] Oblong; resembling the longitudinal section of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itself on both sides in an oval figure of an hundred yards. Addison on Italy.

Mercurius, nearest to the central sun,

Does in an oval orbit, circling run;
But rarely is the object of our sight,
In solar glory sunk. Blackmore on Creat. b. ii.

OVAL. n. f.

A synonymous word, or a mere negation of the contrary; a translation of the word into another tongue, or a grammatical explication of it, is sometimes sufficient; as a triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the shape of an egg. Watts's Logic.

OVARIOUS. adj. [from ovum.] Consisting of eggs.

He to the rocks

Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food. Thomson.

OVARY. n. f. [ovaire, Fr. ovarium, Latin.] The part of the body in which impregnation is performed.

The ovary or part where the white involveth it, is in the second region of the matrix, which is somewhat long and inverted. Brown's V. Err. b. iii.

OVIATION. n. f. [ovation, Fr. ovatio, Lat.] A lesser triumph among the Romans allowed to those commanders who had won a victory without much blood shed, or defeated some less formidable enemy. Dia.

OUBAT. n. f. A sort of caterpillar; an insect.

OUBUST. n. f. An ornament of gold or jewels.

OUCHE. n. f. An ornament of gold or jewels.

OUCHE. n. f. Ouches or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory. Bacon, Essay 38.

OUCHE. n. f. The blow given by a boar's tusk. Ans.

OVEN. n. f. [open, Saxon.] An arched cavity heated with fire to bake bread.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard,
And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flaming in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Fairy Queen.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of

of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking. Shakefp.

Bats have been found in ovens and other hollow close places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they sleep in the winter, and eat nothing. Bacon.

OVER. hath a double signification in the names of places, according to the different situations of them. If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon opre, a brink or bank; but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the same name, distinguished by the addition of neher, then over is from the Gothick ufar, above. Gilpin's Camden.

OVER. prep. [ufar, Gothick; opre, Saxon.]

1. Above; with respect to excellence or dignity.

How happy some, over other some can be!

Thro' Athens I am thought as fair as she. Shakefp.

Young Pallas shone conspicuous over the rest;

Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his vest. Dryden.

High, over all, was your great conduct shown,

You fought our safety, but forgot your own. Dryden.

The commentary which attends this poem, will have one advantage over most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures. Advert. to Pope's Dunciad.

And it will afford field enough for a divine to enlarge on, by shewing the advantages which the Christian world has over the Heathen. Swift.

2. Above, with regard to rule or authority.

The church has over her bishops, able to silence the factious, no less by their preaching than by their authority. South.

Captain, yourself are the fittest to live and reign not over, but next and immediately under the people. Dryden.

3. Above in place.

He was more than over shoes in love. Shakefp.

The street should see as the walk over head. Shakefp.

Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care;

Over whole heads those arrows fly,
Of sad distrust and jealousy. Waller.

4. Across; as, he leaped over the brook.

Certain lakes and pits, such as that of Avannes poison birds which fly over them. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The geese fly over the barn, the bees in arms

Drive headlong from their waxen cells in swarms. Dryden.

5. Through.

All the world over, those that received not the commands of Christ and his doctrines of purity and perseverance, were signally destroyed. Hammond.

6. Upon.

Wise governors have as great a watch over fames, as they have of the actions and designs. Bacon.

Angelic quires

Sung heav'nly anthems of his victory

Over temptation and the tempter proud. Milton.

7. Before.

This is only used in over night.

On their intended journey to proceed,

And over night whatso thereto did need. Hubbard.

OVER. adv.

1. Above the top.

Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over, shall men give. Luke vi. 38.

2. More than a quantity assigned.

Even here likewise the laws of nature and reason be of necessary use; yet somewhat over and besides them is necessary, namely human and positive law. Hooker, b. i.

And when they had mete it, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack. Ex. xvi. 18.

The ordinary foldiers having all their pay, and a month's pay over, were sent into their countries. Hayward.

The eastern people determined their digit by the breadth of barley corns, six making a digit, and twenty-four a hand's breadth: a small matter over or under. Arbutnot.

3. From side to side.

The fan of an Indian king, made of the feathers of a peacock's tail, compos'd into a round form, bound altogether with a circular rim, above a foot over. Grew.

4. From one to another.

This golden cluster the herald delivereth to the Tifan, who delivereth it over to that son that he had formerly chosen. Bacon's New Atlantis.

5. From a country beyond the sea.

It hath a white berry, but is not brought over with the coral. Bacon's Nat. History.

They brought new customs and new vices over;

Taught us more arts than honest men require. Philips.

6. On the surface.

The first came out red all over, like an hairy garment. Gen. xxv. 25.

7. Past.

This is rather the sense of an adjective.

Soliman pausing a little upon the matter, the heat of his fury being something over, suffered himself to be treated. Knalles's Hist. of the Turks.

OVE

Meditate upon the effects of anger; and the best time to do this, is to look back upon anger when the fit is over. Bacon.

What the garden choicest bears

To fit and taste, till this meridian heat

Be over, and the sun more cool decline. Milton.

The act of stealing was soon over, and cannot be undone,

For it the finner is only answerable to God or his vicegerent. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

He will, as soon as his first surprize is over, justly begin to wonder how such a favour came to be bestowed on him. Aterbury's Sermons.

There youths and nymphs in comfort gay,

Shall hail the rising, close the parting day;

With me, alas! with me those joys are over.

For me the vernal garlands bloom no more. Pope.

8. Throughout; completely.

Well, Shakefp.

Have you read over the letters I sent you?

Let them argue over all the topics of divine goodness and human weakness, yet how trifling must be their plea! South's Sermons.

9. With repetition; another time.

He over and over divides him,

'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness. Shakespeare.

Sitting or standing still confin'd to roar,

In the same verie, the same rules over and over. Dryden.

Longing they look, and gaping at the fight,

Devour her over and over with vast delight. Dryden.

Thou, my Hector, art thyself alone,

My parents, brothers, and my lord in one:

O kill not all my kindred over again,

Nor tempt the dangers of the dusty plain;

But in this tow'r, for our defence, remain. Dryden.

Whenever children forget, or do an action awkwardly, make them do it over and over again, till they are perfect. Locke on Education.

If this miracle of Christ's rising from the dead, be not sufficient to convince a resolved libertine, neither would the rising of one now from the dead be sufficient for that purpose; since it would only be the doing that over again which hath been done already. Aterbury.

The most learned will never find occasion to act over again what is fabled of Alexander the Great, that when he had conquered the eastern world, he wept for want of more worlds to conquer. Watts.

10. Extraordinary; in a great degree.

The word symbol should not seem to be over difficult. Baker.

11. OVER and above. Besides; beyond what was first supposed or immediately intended.

Moses took the redemption money of them that were over and above. Numb. iii. 49.

He gathered a great mass of treasure, and gained over and above the good will and esteem of all people wherever he came. L'Estrange.

12. OVER against. Opposite; regarding in front.

In Ticinum is a church with windows only from above. It reporteth the voice thirteen times, if you stand by the close end of the wall, over against the door. Bacon.

I visit his picture, and place myself over against it whole hours together. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 241.

Over against this church stands a large hospital, erected by a shoemaker. Addison on Italy.

13. In composition it has a great variety of significations; it is arbitrarily prefixed to nouns, adjectives, or other parts of speech in a sense equivalent to more than enough; too much.

Devilish Macbeth,

By many of these trains hath fought to win me

Into his pow'r: and modest wisdom plucks me

From over-credulous haste. Shakefp. Macbeth.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw a satyr; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peach.

These over-busy spirits, whose labour is their only reward, hunt a shadow and chase the wind. Decay of Piety.

If the ferment of the breast be vigorous, an over-fermentation in the part, produceth a phlegmon. Wifeman.

A gangrene doth arise in phlegmons, through the unreasonable application of over-cold medicaments. Wifeman.

Poets, like lovers, should be bold and dare,

They spoil their business with an over-care:

And he who servilely creeps after sense,

Is safe, but ne'er will reach an excellence. Dryden.

OVE

that himself was guilty of putting tricks upon himself?

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability; suitable to that state of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein to check our over-confidence and presumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made sensible of our shortightedness.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as some others over-diligently cultivated. It is easy for men to write one after another, of cases and genders.

It is an ill way of establishing this truth, and silencing atheists, to take some men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity; and out of an over-fondness of that darling invention, cashier all other arguments.

A grown person surfeiting with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach: had this happened to him by an over-dose of honey, when a child, all the same effects would have followed, but the cause would have been mistaken, and the antipathy counted natural.

He over-acted his part; his passions, when once let loose, were too impetuous to be managed.

Take care you over-burn not the turf; it is only to be burnt so as may make it break.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby naufricate and grow tired of a particular subject.

The memory of the learner should not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas, one idea effaces another.

An over-grasp does not retain the largest handful.

To OVER-ABOUND, v. n. [over and abound.] To abound more than enough.

Both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'er-abound.

The learned, never over-abounding in transitory coin, should not be discontented.

To OVER-ACT, v. a. [over and act.] To act more than enough.

You over-act, when you should underdo:

A little call yourself again, and think.

Princes courts may over-act their reverence, and make themselves laughed at for their foolishness and extravagant relative worship.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety, by over-acting some things in religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned.

To OVER-ARCH, v. a. [over and arch.] To cover as with an arch.

Where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendent woods.

To OVER-AWE, v. a. [over and awe.] To keep in awe by superior influence.

The king was present in person to overlook the magistrates, and to over-awe these subjects with the terror of his sword.

Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of gesture, or least action, over-aw'd
His malice.

I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and sounding in your ears, the empty title which inspired you with presumption, and over-awed my daughter to comply.

A thousand fears Still over-awe when she appears.

To OVER-BALANCE, v. a. To weigh down; to preponderate.

Not doubting but by the weight of reason I should counterpoise the *over-balance*s of any factions.

The hundred thousand pounds per annum, wherein we over-balance them in trade, must be paid us in money.

When these important considerations are set before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, should a bare single possibility be of weight enough to over-balance them.

To OVER-BALANCE, n. f. [over and balance.] Something more than equivalent.

Our exported commodities would, by the return, encrease the treasure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, than a mighty over-balance of our exported to our imported commodities.

The mind should be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either side, any further than the over-balance of probability gives it the turn of assent and belief.

OVER-BATTLE, adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; batten is to grow fat, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on trout.] Too fruitful; exuberant.

In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in over-battle grounds; the fertile disposition whereof is good, yet because it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth abundantly through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, being either prevented in place or defrauded of nourishment, faileth.

To OVER-BEAR, v. a. [over and bear.] To repress; to subdue; to whelm; to bear down.

What more savage than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws.

My desire
All continent impediment would over-bear.

That did oppose my will.

The ocean o'er-peering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head
O'er-bears your officers.

Our counsel, it pleas'd your highness
To over-bear.

Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be over-borne by thee.

The Turkish commanders, with all their forces, assailed the city, thrusting their men into the breaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have discouraged or over-born the Christians.

The point of reputation, when news first came of the battle lost, did over-bear the reason of war.

Yet fortune, valour, all is over-born,
By numbers; as the long refusing bank
By the impetuous torrent.

A body may as well be over-born by the violence of a shallow, rapid stream, as swallowed up in the gulph of smooth water.

Crowding on the last the first impel;
Till over-born with weight the Cyprians fell.

The judgment, if swayed by the over-bearing of passion, and stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap, or over-bearing multitude of documents at one time.

The horror or loathsomeness of an object may over-bear the pleasure which results from its greatness, novelty, or beauty.

To OVER-BID, v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have o'er-bid all my past sufferings,
And all my future too.

To OVER-BLOW, v. n. [over and blow.] To be past its violence.

To OVER-BLOW, v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Until the blustering storm is over-blown.

All those tempests being over-blown, there long after arose a new storm which over-run all Spain.

This age fit of fear is over-blown,
An easy talk it is to win our own.

Some angel that beholds her there,
Instruct us to record what she was here;
And when this cloud of sorrow's o'er-blown,
Thro' the wide world we'll make her graces known.

Seiz'd with secret joy,
When storms are over-blown.

OVER-BOARD, adv. [over and board.] Off the ship; out of the ship.

The great assembly met again; and now he that was the cause of the tempest being thrown over-board, there were hopes a calm should ensue.

A merchant having a vessel richly fraught at sea in a storm, there is but one certain way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading over-board.

The trembling dotard, to the deck he drew,
And hoisted up and over-board he threw;

This done, he seized the helm.

He obtained liberty to give them only one song before he leaped over-board, which he did, and then plunged into the sea.

Though great ships were commonly bad sea-boats, they had a superior force in a sea engagement: the shock of them being sometimes so violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of lesser ships over-board.

To OVER-BULK, v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppress by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropt,
Or shedding, breed a nursery of like evils,
To over-bulk us all.

To OVER-BURDEN, v. a. [over and burthen.] To load with too great weight.

If he were not cloyed with his company, and that she thought not the earth over-burthened with him, she would cool his fiery grief.

OVE

To OVER-BUY, v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He, when want requires, is only wise,
Who lights not foreign aids, nor over-buys;

But on our native strength, in time of need, relies.

To OVER-CARRY, v. a. [over and carry.] To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to succeed; by reason whereof his natural affection and duty was less easy to be over-carried by ambition.

To OVER-CAST, v. a. part. over-cast. [over and cast.] 1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

As they pass,
The day with clouds was sudden over-cast.

Hie, Robin, over-cast the night;
The flarry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron.

Our days of age are sad and over-cast, in which we find that of all our vain passions and affections past, the sorrow only abideth.

I of fumes and humid vapours made,
No cloud in so serene a mansion find,
To over-cast her ever-flaming mind.

Those clouds that over-cast our morn shall fly,
Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky.

The dawn is over-cast, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day.

To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is incircled with a thread, over-cast.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour where-with it over-casteth itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good.

Their arms abroad with gray moss over-cast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast.

To rate too high in computation.

The king in his accompt of peace and calms, did much over-cast his fortunes, which proved full of broken seas, tides, and tempests.

To OVER-CHARGE, v. a. [over and charge.] 1. To oppress; to cloy; to surcharge.

On air we feed in every instant, and on meats but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppress and over-charge nature, maketh her to sink unawares in the mid-way.

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating, as wiser by always reading.

Too much over-charges nature, and turns more into disease than nourishment.

To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is over-charged with consonants.

To burthen.

He whispers to his pillow,
The secrets of his over-charged soul.

To rate too high.

O'er-charging your free purses with large fines.

To fill too full.

Her heart is but o'er-charg'd; she will recover.

The fumes of passion do as really intoxicate, and confound the judging and discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brain of a man over-charged with it.

If they would make distinct abstract ideas of all the varieties in human actions, the number must be infinite, and the memory over-charged to little purpose.

The action of the Iliad and Æneid in themselves exceeding short, are so beautifully extended by the invention of episodes, that they make up an agreeable story sufficient to employ the memory without over-charging it.

To load with too great a charge.

They were
As canons over-charg'd with double cracks.

Who in deep mines, for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'er-charg'd, breaks, milles, or recoils.

To OVER-FLOW, v. n. [over and flow.] 1. To be fuller than the brim can hold.

While our strong walls secure us from the foe,
E'er yet with blood our ditches over-flow.

Had I the same consciousness that I saw Noah's flood, as that I saw the over-flowing of the Thames last winter, I could not doubt, that I who saw the Thames over-flowed, and viewed the flood at the general deluge, was the same self.

To exuberate.

A very ungrateful return to the author of all we enjoy, but such as an over-flowing plenty too much inclines men to make.

To OVER-FLOW, v. a.

1. To fill beyond the brim.

Suppose thyself in as great a sadness as ever did load thy spirit, wouldst thou not bear it cheerfully if thou wert sure that some excellent fortune would relieve and recompense thee so as to over-flow all thy hopes.

New milk that all the winter never fails,
And all the summer over-flows the pails.

To deluge; to drown; to over-run; to over-power.

The Scythians, at such time as the northern nations over-flowed all Christendom, came down to the sea-coast.

Clavius over-flow'd th' unhappy coast.

Do not the Nile and the Niger make yearly inundations in our days, as they have formerly done? and are not the countries countries so over-flown, still situate between the tropicks?

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was over-flowed and destroyed in a deluge of water, that overpread the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from east to west.

Thus oft by mariners are shewn,
Earl Godwin's castles over-flown.
O'VER-FLOW. n. f. [over and flow.] Inundation; more than fulness; such a quantity as runs over; exuberance.

To O'VER-FREIGHT. v. a. pret. over-freighted; part. over-fraught. [over and freight.] To load too heavily; to fill with too great quantity.

A boat over-freighted with people, in rowing down the river, was, by the extreme weather, sunk.

Whispers the o'er-fraught heart and bids it break.
Sorrow has to o'er-fraught

This sinking barque, I shall not live to shew
How I abhor my first rash crime.

To O'VER-GET. v. a. [over and get.] To reach; to come up with.

With six hours hard riding, through so wild places, as it was rather the cunning of my horse sometimes, than of myself, to rightly hit the way, I over-got them a little before night.

To O'VER-GLANCE. v. a. [over and glance.] To look hastily over.

I have, but with a cursory eye,
O'er-glanc'd the articles.

To O'VER-GO. v. a. [over and go.] To surpass; to excel.

Thinking it beyond the degree of humanity to have a wit so far over-going his age, and such dreadful terror proceed from so excellent beauty.

Great nature hath laid down at last,
That mighty birth wherewith so long she went,
And over-went the times of ages past,
Here to lie in upon our soft content.

To O'VER-GORGE. v. a. [over and gorge.] To gorge too much.

Art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylla, over-gorg'd.

To O'VER-GREAT. adj. [over and great.] Too great.

Though putting the mind unprepared upon an unusual stress ought to be avoided; yet this must not run it, by an over-great thyness of difficulties, into a lazy sauntering about obvious things.

To O'VER-GROW. v. a. [over and grow.]

Roof and floor, and walls were all of gold,
But over-grown with dust and old decay,
And hid in darkness that none could behold
The hue thereof.

OVE

The woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'er-grown,
And all their echo's mourn.

To rise above.
If the binds be very strong and much over-grown the poles, some advice to strike off their heads with a long switch.

To O'VER-GROW. v. n. To grow beyond the fit or natural size.

One part of his army, with incredible labour, cut a way thorough the thick and over-grown woods, and so came to Solyman.

A huge over-grown ox was grazing in a meadow.
Him for a happy man I own,
Whole fortune is not over-grown.

O'VER-GROWTH. n. f. [over and growth.] Exuberant growth.

The over-growth of some complexion,
Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason.

To stop their over-growth, as in-mate guests, Too numerous.

To O'VER-HALE. v. a. [over and hale.]

The welked Pheebus gan avail
His weary wain, and now the frosty night
Her mantle black thro' heaven gan over-hale.

To O'VER-HANG. v. a. [over and hang.] To jut over; to impend over.

Lend the eye a terrible aspect,
Let the brow overwhelm it,
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'er-hang and jutting his confounded base.

Hide me ye forests, in your closest bow'rs,
Where flows the murm'ring brook, inviting dreams,
Where bord'ring hazle over-hangs the streams.

If you drink tea upon a promontory that over-hangs the sea, it is preferable to an assembly.

To O'VER-HANG. v. n. To jut over.

The rest was craggy cliff, that over-hung
Still as it rose, impossible to climb.

To O'VER-HARDEN. v. a. [over and harden.] To make too hard.

By laying it in the air, it has acquired such a hardness, that it was brittle like over-hardened steel.

His children and his family;
And order all things till he come,
Sweaty and over-labour'd home.

To O'VERLA'DE. v. a. [over and lade.] To over-burthen.

Thus to throng and over-lade a foul
With love, and then to have a room for fear,
That shall all that controul,
What is it but to rear

Our passions and our hopes on high,
That thence they may deify

The noblest way how to despair and die?

O'VERLARGE. adj. [over and large.] Larger than enough.

Our attainments cannot be over-large, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthrifly.

O'VERLASHINGLY. n. f. [over and lash.] With exaggeration.

A mean word, now obsolete.

Although I be far from their opinion who write too over-lighly, that the Arabian tongue is in use in two third parts of the inhabited world, yet I find that it extendeth where the religion of Mahomet is professed.

To O'VERLAY. v. a. [over and lay.]

1. To oppress by too much weight or power.

Some commons are barren, the nature is such,
And some over-layeth the commons too much.

Not only that mercy which keepeth from being over-laid and oppress'd, but mercy which saveth from being touched with grievous miseries.

When any country is over-laid by the multitude which live upon it, there is a natural necessity compelling it to dis-burthen itself and lay the load upon others.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and over-laid by the other.

Good laws had been antiquated by the course of time, or over-laid by the corruption of manners.

Our fins have over-laid our hopes.

The strong Emetrius came in Arcite's aid,
And Palamon with odds was over-laid.

2. To smother with too much or too close covering.

Nor then destroys it with too fond a flay,
Like mothers, which their infants over-lay.

3. To smother; to crush; to overwhelm.

Ships burnt in fight, or forc'd on rocky shores,
The new-born babes by nurses over-laid.

They quickly stifled and over-laid those infant principles, of piety and virtue, sown by God in their hearts; so that they brought a voluntary darkness and stupidity upon their minds.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Ptolemy:
A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'er-lays your fire.

The stars, no longer over-laid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mists,
And upward shoot.

Season the passions of a child with devotion, which seldom dies; though it may seem extinguished for a while, it breaks out as soon as misfortunes have brought the man to himself.

The fire may be covered and over-laid, but cannot be entirely quenched and smothered.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust to the fund of their own reasons, advanced but not over-laid by commerce with books.

To cloud; to over-cast.

Phoebus' golden face it did attain,
As when a cloud his beams doth over-lay.

5. To cover superficially.

The over-laying of their chapters was of silver, and all the pillars were filled with silver.

By his precept a sanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, over-laid with gold.

6. To join by something laid over.

To fortify thus far, and over-lay,
With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss.

To O'VERLAP. v. a. [over and lap.] To pass by a jump.

A step
On which I must fall down or else o'er-lap,
For in my way it lies.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land;
If daring ships and men prophane,
Th' eternal fences over-lap,
And pass at will the boundless deep.

OVE

OVERLEATHER. n. f. [over and leather.] The part of the shoe that covers the foot.

I have sometimes more feet than shoes; or such shoes as my toes look through the over-leather.

OVERLIGHT. n. f. [over and light.] Too strong light.

An over-light maketh the eyes dark, inasmuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness.

To O'VERLIVE. v. a. [over and live.] To live longer than another; to survive; to out-live.

Mufidorus, who shewed a mind not to over-live Pyrocles, prevailed.

He concludes in hearty prayers,
That your attempts may over-live the hazard
And fearful meeting of their opposite.

To O'VERLIVE. v. n. To live too long.

Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
To deathless pain?

To O'VERLORD. v. a. [over and lord.] To burthen with too much.

The memory of youth is charged and over-loaded, and all they learn is meer jargon.

O'VERLONG. adj. [over and long.] Too long.

I have transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods and parentheses over-long.

To O'VERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.]

1. To view from a higher place.

The pile o'er-look'd the town, and drew the sight,
Surpris'd at once with reverence and delight.

2. To view fully; to peruse.

Woud I had o'er-look'd the letter.

3. To superintend; to over-see.

He was present in person to over-look the magistrates, and to over-awe those subjects with the terror of his sword.

In the greater out parishes many of the poor parishioners through neglect do perish, for want of some heedful eye to over-look them.

4. To review.

The time and care that are required,
To over-look and file, and polish well,
Fright poets from that necessary toil.

5. To pass by indulgently.

This part of good-nature which consists in the pardoning and over-looking of faults, is to be exercised only in doing ourselves justice in the ordinary commerce of life.

In vain do we hope that God will over-look such high contradiction of sinners, and pardon offences committed against the plain convictions of conscience.

6. To neglect; to slight.

Of the two relations, Christ over-looked the meaner, and entitled and denominated them solely from the more honourable.

To over-look the entertainment before him, and languish for that which lies out of the way, is sickly and servile.

The suffrage of our poet laureat should not be over-looked.

Religious fear, when produced by just apprehensions of a divine power, naturally over-looks all human greatness that stands in competition with it, and extinguishes every other terror.

The happiest of mankind, over-looking those solid blessings which they already have, set their hearts upon somewhat they want.

They over-look truth in the judgments they pass on adversity and prosperity. The temptations that attend the former they can easily see, and dread at a distance; but they have no apprehensions of the dangerous consequences of the latter.

To OVERLOOKER. n. f. [over and look.]

The original word signifies an over-looker, or one who stands higher than his fellows and over-looks them.

OVERLOOP. n. f. The same with orlop.

In extremity we carry our ordinance better than we were wont, because our nether over-loops are raised commonly from the water; to wit, between the lower part of the port and the sea.

OVERMASTED. adj. [over and mast.] Having too much mast.

Cloanthus better mann'd, purloin'd him fast,
But his o'er-masted gally check'd his haste.

To OVERMASTER. v. a. [over and master.] To subdue; to govern.

For your desire to know what is between us,
O'er-master it as you may.

OVE

So sleeps a pilot, whose poor bark is preft
With many a merciless o'er-mast'ring wave. Cragshaw.
Over-mast'ring with a score of drunkards, the only soldiery left about them, or else to comply with all rapines and violences. Milton on Education.
To OVERMA'TCH. v. a. [over and match.] To be too powerful; to conquer; to oppress by superior force.
I have seen a swan
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves. Shakefp.
Sir William Lucy, with me
Set from our o'er-match'd forces forth for aid. Shakefp.
Affixt, lest I who erst
Thought none my equal, now be over-match'd. Par. Reg.
How great soever our curiosity be, our excess is greater, and does not only over-match, but supplant it. Dec. of Piety.
He from that length of time dire omens drew,
Of English over-match'd, and Dutch too strong,
Who never fought three days but to pursue. Dryden.
It moves our wonder, that a foreign guest
Should over-match the most, and match the best. Dryden.
OVERMA'TCH. n. f. [over and match.] One of superior powers;
one not to be overcome.
Spain is no over-match for England, by that which leadeth all men; that is, experience and reason. Bacon.
Eve was his over-match, who self-deceiv'd
And rash, before-hand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with or his own. Milton.
In a little time there will scarce be a woman of quality in Great-Britain, who would not be an over-match for an Irish priest. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 89.
OVER-MEASURE. n. f. [over and measure.] Something given over the due measure.
To OVER-MIX. v. a. [over and mix.] To mix with too gratitude, to advance the first authors of any useful discovery among the number of their gods. Wilkins.

An over-much use of salt, besides that it occasions thirst and over-much drinking, has other ill effects. Locke.
OVERMUCH. adv. In too great a degree.
The fault which we find in them is, that they over-much abridge the church of her power in these things. Whereupon they re-charge us, as if in these things we gave the church a liberty which hath no limits or bounds. Hooker.
Perhaps
I also erred, in over-much admiring
What seem'd in thee so perfect, that I thought
No evil durst attempt thee. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Deject not then so over-much thyself,
Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides. Milton.
OVERMUCH. n. f. More than enough.
By attributing over-much to things
Less excellent, as thou thyself perceiv'st. Milton.
With respect to the blessings the world enjoys, even good men may ascribe over-much to themselves. Grew.
OVERMUCHNESS. n. f. [from over-much.] Exuberance; superabundance.
There are words that do as much raise a stile, as others can depress it; superlatives and over-muchness amplifies. It may be above faith, but not above a mean. Ben. Johnson.
OVERNIGHT. n. f. [over and night.] This seems to be used by Shakespeare as a noun, but by Addison more properly, as I have before placed it, as a noun with a preposition.] Night before bed-time.
If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been o'erta'en. Shakespeare.
Will confesses, that for half his life his head ached every morning with reading men over-night. Addison.
To OVERNAME. v. a. [over and name.] To name in a series.
Over-name them; and as thou namest them I will describe them. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.
To OVEROFFICE. v. a. [over and office.] To lord by virtue of an office.
This might be the fate of a politician which this over-office. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
OVEROFFICIOUS. adj. [over and officious.] Too busy; too importunate.
This is an over-officious truth, and is always at a man's heels; so that if he looks about him, he must take notice of
it. Collier on Human Reason.
To OVERPASS. v. a. [over and pass.]
1. To cross.
I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'er-pass,

OVE

When on a sudden Torrifmond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er. Dryden.
What have my Scyllas and my Syrtis done,
When these they o'er-pass, and those they thum? Dryden.
2. To over-look; to pass with disregard.
The complaint about plams and hymns might as well be over-pass'd without any answer, as it is without any cause brought forth. Hooker, b. v. f. 37.
Remember that Pellean conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east
He slightly view'd, and slightly over-pass'd. Milton.
3. To omit in a reckoning.
Arithmetical progression demonstrates how fast mankind would increase, over-passing as miraculous, though in fact natural, that example of the Israelites who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from seventy to sixty thousand able men. Raleigh.
4. To omit; to not receive.
If the grace of him which faveth over-pass some, so that the prayer of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgments of righteousness. Hooker.
OVERPASS. part. adj. [from over-pass.] Gone; past.
What canst thou swear by now?
—By time to come,
That thou hast wronged in the time o'er-pass. Shakefp.
To OVERPAY. v. a. [over and pay.] To reward beyond the price.
Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay, and pay again; Shakespeare.
When I have found it.
You have yourself, your kindness over-paid,
He ceases to oblige who can upbraid. Dryden.
Wilt thou with pleasure hear thy lover's strains,
And with one heav'nly smile o'er-pay his pains. Prior.
To OVERPERCH. n. f. [over and perch.] To fly over.
With love's light wings did I o'er-perch these walls.
For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shakefp.
To OVERPEER. v. a. [over and peer.] To over-look; to hover above. It is now out of use.
The ocean over-peering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'er-bears your officers. Shakefp. Hamlet.
Your Argosies with portly sail,
Do over-peer the petty traffickers,
That curt'ly to them, do them reverence. Shakefp.
Mountainous error would be too highly heapt,
For truth to o'er-peer. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Thus yields the cedar to the ax's edge,
Whose top branch o'er-peer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'ful wind. Shakefp.
They are invincible by reason of the over-peering mountains that back the one, and slender fortifications of the other to land-ward. Sandys's Tourney.
OVERPLUS. n. f. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than sufficient.
Some other sinners there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise. Hooker's Pref.
A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus remained still in the mortar. L'Estrange.
It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune. Addi.
To OVERPLY. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriously.
What supports me, dost thou ask?
The conscience, friend, 't' have lost them over-plied,
In liberty's defence. Milton's Par.
To OVERPOSE. v. a. [over and pose.] To outweigh.
Whether cripples who have lost their thighs will float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others over-posed by the hinder legs; we have not made experiment. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. iv.
The scale
O'er-posed by darkness, lets the night prevail;
And day, that lengthen'd in the summer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is lost in night. Creech.
OVERPOSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Preponderant weight.
Horace, in his first and second book of odes, was still rising, but came not to his meridian till the third. After which his judgment was an over-poise to his imagination.
He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he descended in his fourth by slow degrees. Dryden.
Some over-poise of sway, by turns they share,
In peace the people, and the prince in war. Dryden.
To OVERPOWER. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over; to oppress by superiority.
Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be over-powered. Milt. Par. Lost.
As much light over-powers the eye, so they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with snow, are wont to complain of too much light. Boyle.
Reason allows none to be confident, but him only who governs

OVE

governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and therefore can neither be surpris'd nor over-powered.
things; and therefore can neither be surpris'd nor over-powered.
South's Sermons.
After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself outwitted by Caesar; he broke with him, over-powered him in the senate, and caused many unjust decrees to pass against him. Dryden's Dedicat. to Aeneid.
Inspiration is, when such an over-powering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it. Watts's Logick.
The historian makes these mountains the standards of the rise of the water; which they could never have been, had they not been standing, when it did so rise and over-power the earth. Woodw. Nat. Hist.
To OVERPRESS. v. a. [over and press.] To bear upon with irresistible force; to overwhelm; to crush.
Having an excellent horse under him, when he was over-pressed by some, he avoided them. Sidney.
Michael's arm main promontories flung,
And over-press'd whole legions weak with sin. Rescomm.
When a prince enters on a war, he ought maturely to consider whether his coffers be full, his people rich by a long peace and free trade, not over-pressed with many bur-thenome taxes. Swift.
To OVERPRIZE. v. a. [over and prize.] To value at too high price.
Parents over-prize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection. Watson.
OVERRANK. n. f. [over and rank.] Too rank.
It produces over-rank binds. Mortimer's Husbandry.
OVERRATE. v. a. [over and rate.] To rate at too much.
While vain shows and scenes you over-rate,
'Tis to be fear'd,
That as a fire the former house o'erthrew,
Machines and tempests will destroy the new. Dryden.
To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to over-rate the conveniences of our station, and in estimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather too low than too high; for our desires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary, and our temptations to our desires.
Regent.
To OVERREACH. v. a. [over and reach.]
1. To rise above.
The mountains of Olympus, Atho and Atlas, over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds. Raleigh.
Sixteen hundred years after the earth was made, it was overflowed in a deluge of water in such excess, that the floods over-reach'd the tops of the highest mountains. Burnet.
2. To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent. A sagacious man is said to have a long reach.
What more cruel than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws whereunto he should be subject. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.
I have laid my brain in the sun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent to gross over-reaching. Shakefp.
Shame to be overcome, or over-reach'd,
Would utmost vigour raise, and raise'd unite. Milton.
A man who had been matchless held
In cunning, over-reach'd where least he thought,
To save his credit, and for very spite
Still will be tempting him who foils him still. Milton.
There is no pleasanter encounter than a trial of skill betwixt sharpers to over-reach one another. L'Estrange.
Forbidden, oppression, defrauding and over-reaching one another, perfidiousness and treachery. Tillotson.
Such a principle is ambition, or a desire of fame, by which many vicious men are over-reach'd, and engaged contrary to their natural inclinations in a glorious and laudable course of action. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 255.
John had got an impression that Lewis was so deadly cunning a man, that he was afraid to venture himself alone with him; at last he took heart of grace; let him come up, quoth he, it is but sticking to my point, and he can never overreach me. History of J. Bull.
To OVERREACH. v. n. A horse is said to over-reach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forwards; and strikes his toes against his fore shoes. Parr. Dict.
OVERREACHER. n. f. [from over-reach.] A cheat; a deceiver.
To OVERREAD. v. a. [over and read.] To peruse.
The contents of this is the return of the duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure. Shakespeare.
To OVERRED. v. a. [over and red.] To smear with red.
Pick thy face and over-red thy fear,
Thou lilly liver'd boy. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
To OVERROAST. v. a. [over and roast.] To roast too much.
I was burnt and dried away,
And better 'twere, that both of us did fast,
Since of ourselves, ourselves are choleric,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Shakespeare.

OVE

To OVERRULE. v. a. [over and rule.]
1. To influence with predominant power; to be superior in authority.
Which humour perceiving to over-rule me, I strive against
it. Sidney.
That which the church by her ecclesiastical authority shall probably think and desire to be true or good, must in con-gruity of reason over-rule all other inferior arguments whatsoever. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
Except our own private, and but probable resolutions, be by the law of publick determinations over-ruled, we take away all possibility of sociable life in the world. Hooker.
What if they be such as will be over-ruled with some one, whom they dare not displease. Whitgift.
So much his passion and animosity over-ruled his conscience.
Clarendon, b. viii.
A wife man shall over-rule his stars, and have a greater influence upon his own content, than all the constellations and planets of the firmament. Taylor.
He is acted by a passion which absolutely over-rules him;
and so can no more recover himself, than a bowl rolling down an hill stop itself in the midst of its career. South.
'Tis temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; unless where they are obliged by an over-ruling impulse of conscience and duty. L'Estrange.
A man may, by the influence of an over-ruling planet, be inclined to lust, and yet by the force of reason overcome that bad influence. Swift.
2. To govern with high authority; to superintend.
Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly overrule, as in other matters he is accustomed? Hayward.
3. To supercede: as in law to over-rule a plea is to reject it as incompetent.
Thirty acres make a farthing land, nine farthings a Cornith acre, and four Cornith acres a knights fee. But this rule is over-ruled to a greater or lesser quantity, according to the fruitfulness or barrenness of the soil. Carew.
To OVERRUN. v. a. [over and run.]
1. To harraß by incursions; to ravage; to rove over in a hostile manner.
Those barbarous nations that over-ran the world, possessed those dominions, whereof they are now so called. Spenser.
Till the tears the shed,
Like envious floods o'er-ran her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature in the world. Shakefp.
They err, who count it glorious to subdue
By conquest far and wide, to over-run
Large countries, and in field great battles win, Great cities by assault. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The nine
Their fainting foes to shameful flight compell'd,
And with restless force o'er-ran the field. Dryden.
Gustavus Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having over-run most of the rest. Addison.
A commonwealth may be over-run by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad consequences upon your trade and liberty. Swift's Miscell.
2. To out-run.
Pyrocles being come to sixteen, over-run his age in growth, strength, and all things following it, that not Mufidorus could perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuously. Sidney, b. ii.
We may out-run
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by over-running. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Ahimaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cush.
2 Sam. xviii. 23.
Gallus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faster than the water can follow, the water ga-thereth upon an heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he suppoeth, holding confidently the motion of the earth to be the cause of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; because the earth over-runmeth the water.
Bacon's Nat. History.
3. To overspread; to cover all over.
With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nab. i. 8.
This disposition of the elements and the parts of the earth, shews us the footsteps of some kind of ruin which happened in such a way, that at the same time a general flood of waters would necessarily over-run the whole earth.
Barnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. To mischief by great numbers; to pester.
To flatter foolish men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the same with betraying people into an opinion, that they are in a virtuous and happy state, when they are over-run with passion and drowned in their lusts. L'Estrange.
Were it not for the incessant labours of this industrious animal, Egypt would be over-run with crocodiles. Addison.
Such provision made, that a country should not want springs as

as were convenient for it; nor be over-run with them, and afford little or nothing else; but a supply every where suitable to the necessities of each climate and region of the globe. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

5. To injure by treading down.
His tears defac'd the surface of the well,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er-run with wrinkles and deform'd with tears. Addison.

6. Among printers, to be obliged to change the disposition of the lines and words in correcting, by reason of the insertions.
To OVERRUN. v. n. To overflow; to be more than full.
Though you have left me,
Yet still my soul o'er-runs with fondness towards you. Smith.
Cattle in inclosures shall always have fresh pasture, that now is all trampled and over-run. Spenser.

1. To superintend; to overlook.
He had charge my discipline to frame,
And tutors nouriture to oversee. Fairy Queen.
She without noise will oversee
His children and his family. Dryden.

2. To overlook; to pass by unheeded; to omit.
I who resolve to oversee
No lucky opportunity,
Will go to council to advise
Which way t' encounter, or surprize. Hud. p. iii.

OVERSEEN. part. [from oversee.] Mistaken; deceived.
A common received error is never utterly overthrown, till such times as we go from signs unto causes, and shew some manifest root or fountain thereof common unto all, whereby it may clearly appear how it hath come to pass that so many have been overseen. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

They rather observed what he had done, and suffered for the king and for his country, without farther enquiring what he had omitted to do, or been overseen in doing. Clarend.

OVERSEER. n. f. [from oversee.]
1. One who overlooks; a superintendent.
There are in the world certain voluntary overseers of all books, whose censure, in this respect, would fall sharp on us. Hooker, b. v. f. 31.

Jehiel and Azariah were overseers under Cononiah. 2 Chron. xxxi. 13.

To entertain a guest, with what a care
Wou'd he his household ornaments prepare;
Harras his servants, and as o'erseer stand,
To keep them working with a threatening wand.
Clean all my plate, he cries. Dryden.

2. An officer who has the care of the parochial provision for the poor.
The church-wardens and overseers of the poor might find it possible to discharge their duties, whereas now in the greater out-parishes many of the poorer parishioners, through neglect, do perish for want of some heedful eye to overlook them. Graunt's Bills of Mort.

To OVERSET. v. a. [over and set.]
1. To turn the bottom upwards; to throw off the basis.
The tempest met,
The sailors master'd, and the ship o'er-set. Dryden.
It is forced through the hiatus's at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible perturbation, even when there is not the least breath of wind; over-setting ships in the harbours, and sinking them. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

Would the confederacy exert itself, as much to annoy the enemy, as they do for their defence, we might bear them down with the weight of our armies, and over-set the whole power of France. Addison on the War.

2. To throw out of regularity.
His action against Catiline ruined the consul, when it saved the city; for it so swelled his soul, that ever afterwards it was apt to be over-set with vanity. Dryden.

To OVERSET. v. n. To fall off the basis.
Part of the weight will be under the axle-tree, which will so far counterpoise what is above it, that it will very much prevent the over-setting. Mortimer's Hist.

To OVERSHADE. v. a. [over and shade.] To cover with any thing that causes darkness.
Black night o'er-shade thy day, and death thy life. Shakespeare.
Dark cloudy death o'er-shades his beams of life, Shakespeare.
And he nor sees, nor hears us. Shakespeare.
No great and mighty subject might eclipse or over-shade the imperial power. Bacon.

If a wood of leaves o'er-shade the tree,
In vain the hind shall vex the threshing floor,
For empty chaff and straw will be thy store. Dryden.
Should we mix our friendly talk,
O'er-shaded in that fav'rite walk;
Both pleas'd with all we thought we wanted. Prior.

To OVERSHADOW. v. a. [over and shadow.]
1. To throw a shadow over any thing.
Weeds choke and over-shadow the corn, and bear it down, or starve and deplete it of nourishment. Bacon.

OVE

Death,
Let the damps of thy dull breath
Over-shadow even the shade,
And make darkness self afraid. Crashaw.

Palpable darkness, and blot out three days. Milton.

2. To shelter; to protect; to cover with superiour influence.
My over-shadowing spirit and might, with thee
I send along: ride forth and bid the deep Within appointed bounds. Milton's Par. Lost.

On her should come
The holy ghost, and the power of the highest O'er shadow her. Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

To OVERSHOOT. v. n. [over and shoot.] To fly beyond the mark.
Often it drops, or over-shoots by the disproportion of distance or application. Collier on Human Reason.

To OVERSHOOT. v. a.
1. To shoot beyond the mark.
Every inordinate appetite defeats its own satisfaction, by over-shooting the mark it aims at. Tilleyson.

2. [With the reciprocal pronoun.] To venture too far; to assert too much.
Leave it to themselves to consider, whether they have in this point or not over-shot themselves; which God doth know is quickly done, even when our meaning is most sincere. Hooker, b. ii. f. 8.

In finding fault with the laws I doubt me, you shall much over-shoot yourself, and make me the more dislike your other dislikes of that government. Spenser on Ireland.

For any thing that I can learn of them, you have over-shot yourself in reckoning. Whitgift.

O'VERSIGHT. n. f. [from over and fight.]
1. Superintendence.
They gave the money, being told unto them that had the over-sight of the house. 2 Kings xii. 11.

Feed the flock of God, taking the over-sight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly. 1 Pet. v. 2.

2. Mistake; error.
Amongst so many huge volumes, as the infinite pains of St. Augustine have brought forth, what one hath gotten greater love, commendation, and honour, than the book wherein he carefully owns his over-sights and sincerely condemneth them. Hooker's Pref.

His son mark'd this over-sight,
And then mistook reverse of wrong for right. Pope.

To OVERSIZE. v. a. [over and size.]
1. To surpass in bulk.
Those bred in a mountainous country, over-size those that dwell on low levels. Sandy's Journey.

2. [over and size, a compoist with which masons cover walls.] To plaster over.
He thus o'er-siz'd with coagulate gore,
Old grandfire Priam seeks. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

To OVERSLIP. v. a. [over and slip.]
1. To pass by leaping.
Presume not ye that are sheep, to make yourselves guides of them that should guide you; neither seek ye to over-slip the fold, which they about you have pitched. Hooker.

2. To pass over.
Mark if to get them she o'er-slip the rest,
Mark if she read them twice, or kiss the name. Donne.

3. To escape.
When that hour o'er-slips me in the day,
Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy fake;
The next ensuing hour some foul mischance Torment me. Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind;
But then the mind much sufferance does o'er-slip,
When grief hath mates and bearing fellowship. Shakespeare.

To OVERSLEEP. v. a. [over and sleep.] To sleep too long.
To OVERSLIP. v. a. [over and slip.] To pass undone, unnoticed, or unused; to neglect.
The carelessness of the justices in imposing this rate, or the negligence of the constables in collecting it, or the backwardness of the inhabitants in paying the same, over-slipped the time. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

It were injurious to over-slip a noble act in the duke during this employment, which I must celebrate above all his expenses. Wotton.

To OVERSNOW. v. a. [over and snow.] To cover with snow.
These I wielded while my bloom was warm,
Bre age unfrung my nerves, or time o'er-snow'd my head. Dryden's Aeneid.

OVERSOULD. part. [from oversel.] Sold at too high a price.
Life with ease I can disclaim, Dryden.
And think it over-sold to purchase fame.

OVERSOON. adv. [over and soon.] Too soon.
The lad may prove well enough, if he over-son think not too well of himself, and will bear away that he heareth of his elders. Sidney, b. ii.

O'VER-

OVE

OVERSPENT. part. [over and spend.] Wearied; harrassed; forepent. The verb overspend is not used.
Theftylis, wild thyme, and garlick beats,
For harvest-hinds, o'erspent with toil and heats. Dryden.

To OVERSPREAD. v. a. [over and spread.] To cover over; to fill; to scatter over.
Whether they were Spaniards, Gauls, Africans, Gothes,
Some other which did overspread all christendom, it is impossible to affirm. Spenser.

Of the three sons of Noah was the whole earth overspread. Gen. ix. 19.

Darkness Europe's face did overspread,
From lazy cells, where superstition bred. Denham.
Not a deluge that only over-run some particular region; but that overspread the face of the whole earth from pole to pole, and from east to west. Burnet.

To OVERSTAND. v. a. [over and stand.] To stand too much upon conditions.
Her's they shall be, since you refuse the price;
What madman would o'erstand his market twice. Dryd.

To OVERSTARE. v. a. [over and stare.] To stare wildly.
Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buffskin, or an overstaring frowned head. Alcham.

To OVERSTOCK. v. a. [over and stock.] To fill too full; to crowd.
If raiillery had entered the old Roman coins, we should have been overstocked with medals of this nature. Addison.
Some bishop, not overstocked with relations, or attached to favourites, bestows some inconsiderable benefice. Swift.

Since we are so bent upon enlarging our flocks, it may be worth enquiring what we shall do with our wool, in case Barnaple should be ever overstocked. Swift.

To OVERSTARE. v. a. [over and stare.] To stare with too much.
Fishes are more numerous than beats or birds, as appears by their numerous spawn; and if all these should come to maturity, even the ocean itself would have been long since overstared with fish. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To OVERSTRAIN. v. n. [over and strain.] To make too violent efforts.
Craffus lost himself, his equipage, and his army, by over-straining for the Parthian gold. Collier.

To OVERSTRAIN. v. a. To stretch too far.
Confessors were apt to overstrain their privileges, in which St. Cyprian made a notable stand against them. Ayliffe.

To OVERSWAY. v. a. [over and sway.] To over-rule; to bear down.
When they are the major part of a general assembly, then their voices being more in number, must over-sway their judgments who are fewer. Hooker.

Great command o'er-sways our order. Shakespeare.

To OVERSWELL. v. a. [over and swell.] To rise above.
Fill, Lucius, fill the wine o'er-swells the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. Shakespeare.

When his banks the prince of rivers, Po,
Doth over-swells, he breaks with hideous fall. Fairfax.

O'VERT. adj. [overt, Fr.] Open; publick; apparent.
To vouch this, is no proof,
Without more certain and more overt test,
Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods. Shakespeare.

Overt and apparent virtues bring forth praise; but there be secret and hidden virtues that bring forth fortune; certain deliveries of a man's self.
My repulse at Hull, was the first overt essay to be made how patiently I could bear the loss of my kingdoms. K. Charles.

The design of their destruction may have been projected in the dark; but when all was ripe, their enemies proceeded to so many overt acts in the face of the nation, that it was obvious to the meanest. Swift.

Whereas human laws can reach no farther than to restrain the overt action, religion extends to the secret motions of the soul. Rogers, Serm. 17.

OVERTLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Openly.
To OVERTAKE. v. a. [over and take.]
1. To catch any thing purloit; to come up to something going before.
We durst not continue longer so near her confines, lest her plagues might suddenly overtake us before we did cease to be partakers with her sins. Hooker.

If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been overtaken; and yet she writes Pursuit would be but vain. Shakespeare.

I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shakespeare.

The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil. Ex. xv. 9.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will out-strip hers, as bullets down before
A later bullet may overtake, the powder being more. Donne.

OVE

 But of thyſelf an humble thought retain. Davies.
 They that overween,
 And at thy growing virtues fret their ſpleen,
 No anger find in thee. Milton.
 He might have learnt
 Leſs overweening, ſince he fail'd in Job,
 Whoſe conſtant perfeverance overcame
 What'er his cruel malice could invent. Par. Reg.
 No man is ſo bold, raſh, and overweening of his own works, as an ill painter and a bad poet. Dryden.
 Enthuſiaſm, though founded neither on reaſon nor revelation, but riſing from the conceits of a warm'd or over- weening brain, works more powerfully on the perſuaſions and actions of men, than either or both together. Locke.
 Men of fair minds and not given up to the overweening of ſelf-flattery, are frequently guilty of it: and, in many caſes, one with amazement hears the arguments, and is aſtoniſh'd at the obſtinacy of a worthy man who yields not to the evidence of reaſon. Locke.
 Now enters overweening pride,
 And ſcandal ever gaping wide. Swift.

OVERWROUGHT. part. [over and wrought.]
 1. Labour'd too much.
 Apelles ſaid of Protegenes, that he knew not when to give over. A work may be overwrought, as well as underwrought: too much labour often takes away the ſpirit, by adding to the poliſhing; ſo that there remains nothing but a dull correctneſs, a piece without any conſiderable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden's Diſſertation.
 2. Worked all over.
 Of Gothic ſtructure was the northern ſide, O'erwrought with ornaments of barbarous pride. Pope.

OVERZEALOUS. adj. [over and zealous.] Too zealous.
 It is not of ſuch weighty neceſſity to determine one way or the other, as ſome overzealous for or againſt the imma-teriality of the ſoul, have been forward to make the world believe. Locke.
OUGH. n. f. [aphth, that is, a whit, Saxon.] This word is therefore more properly written ought. See Aught. Any thing; not nothing.
 For ought that I can underſtand, there is no part but the bare Engliſh pale, in which the Iriſh have not the greateſt footing. Spenser on Ireland.
 He aſked him if he ſaw ought. Mark viii. 23.
 To do ought good never will be our taſk;
 But ever to do ill our ſole delight. Milton's Par. Loſt.
 Universal Lord! be bounteous ſtill
 To give us only good; and if the night
 Have gather'd ought of evil, or conceal'd, Diſperſe it, as now light diſpels the dark. Milton.
OUGH. vart imperf. [This word the etymologiſts make the preterite of owe, but it has often a preſent ſignification.]
 1. [Preterite of owe.] Owed; was bound to pay; have been indebted.
 Apprehending the occaſion, I will add a continuance to that happy motion, and beſides give you ſome tribute of the love and duty I long have ought you. Spelman.

 Like urchins, ouphes, and fairies, green and white. Shak.
OUTPHEN. n. f. [from ouph.] Elfiſh.
 Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,
 Ye moon ſhine revellers and ſhades of night,
 You ouphen heirs of fixed deſtiny,
 Attend your office. Shakeſpeare.
OUR. pron. poſſ. [unc, Saxon.]
 1. Pertaining to us; belonging to us.
 You ſhall
 Lead our firſt battle, brave Macduff, and we Shall take upon us what elſe remains. Shakeſpeare.
 Our wit is given almighty God to know,
 Our will is given to love him being known;
 But God could not be known to us below,
 But by his works which through the ſenſe are ſhown.
 So in our little world this ſoul of ours
 Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
 Doth uſe on divers objects divers powers,
 And ſo are her effects diversify'd. Davies.
 2. When the ſubſtantive goes before, it is written ours.

 Forget the Greeks. Denham.
 Taxallan, ſhook by Montezuma's powers,
 Has, to reſiſt his forces, call'd in ours. Dryden.
 Reading furniſhes the mind only with materials of knowledge, it is thinking makes what we read ours: it is not enough to cram ourſelves with a great load of collections, unleſs we chew them over again, they will not give us ſtrength. Locke.
 Their organs are better diſpoſed than ours, for receiving grateful impreſſions from ſenſible objects. Atterbury.
OURSELVES. reciprocal pronoun. [the plural of myſelf.]
 1. We; not others.
 We ourſelves might diſtinctly number in words a great deal farther than we uſually do, would we find out but ſome fit denominations to ſignify them by. Locke.
 2. Us; not others, in the oblique caſes.
 Safe in ourſelves, while on ourſelves we ſtand,
 The ſea is ours, and that defends the land. Dryden.
OURSELF is uſed in the regal ſtile.
 To make ſociety
 The ſweeter welcome, we will keep ourſelf
 Till ſupper-time alone. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
 We ourſelf will follow
 In the main battle. Shakeſpeare.
 Not ſo much as a treaty can be obtained, unleſs we would denude ourſelf of all force to defend us. Clarendon.
OUSE. n. f. Tanners bark. Ainworth.
OUSEL. n. f. [foyle, Saxon.] A blackbird.
 The merry lark her mattins ſings aloft, learned heads. Spenser on Ireland.

Alders and ashes have been seen to grow out of steeples;
but they manifestly grow out of clefts. Bacon.
He is softer than Ovid; he touches the passions more delicately, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the sciences for a supply. Dryden.
2. Not in; noting exclusion or dismissal.
The sacred nymph
Was out of Dian's favour, as it then befel. Fa. Queen.
Guiltiness
Will speak, though tongues were out of use. Shakefp.
The cavern's mouth alone was hard to find,
Because the path diffus'd was out of mind. Dryden.
My retreat the best companions grace,
Chiefs out of war, and statesmen out of place. Pope.
Does he fancy we can fit,
To hear his out of fashion wit?
But he takes up with younger folks,
Who, for his wine, will bear his jokes.
They are out of their element, and logic is none of their talent. Baker on Learning.
3. No longer in.
Enjoy the present smiling hour;
And put it out of fortune's pow'r. Dryden.
4. Not in; noting unfitness.
He is witty out of season; leaving the imitation of nature, and the cooler dictates of his judgment. Dryden.
Thou'lt lay my passion out of season,
That Cato's great example and misfortunes
Should both conspire to drive it from my thoughts. Add.
5. Not within; relating to a house.
Court holy water in a dry house, is better than the rain waters out of door. Shakefp. King Lear.
6. From; noting extraction.
Juices of fruits are watry and oily: among the watry are all the fruits out of which drink is expressed; as the grape, the apple, the pear, and cherry. Bacon.
7. From; noting copy.
St. Paul quotes one of their poets for this saying, not-

Using old thread-bare phrases, will often make you go out of your way to find and apply them. Swift.
10. From one thing to something different.
He that looks on the eternal things that are not seen, will, through those optics, exactly discern the vanity of all that is visible; will be neither frightened nor flattered out of his duty. Decay of Piety.
Words are able to persuade men out of what they find and feel, and to reverse the very impressions of sense. South.
11. To a different state from; in a different state, noting disorder.
That noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangl'd out of tune and harsh;
That unmatch'd form and feature of blown youth, Blasted with extasy. Shakefp. Hamlet.
When the mouth is out of taste, it maketh things taste sometimes salt, chiefly bitter, and sometimes loathsomely, but never sweet. Bacon.
By the same fatal blow, the earth fell out of that regular form wherein it was produced at first, into all these irregularities in its present form. Burnet on the Earth.
They all at once employ their thronging darts,
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design. Dryden.
12. Not according to.
That there be an equality, so that no man acts or speaks out of character. Pope's View of Ep. Poem.
13. To a different state from; noting separation.
Whoever doth measure by number, must needs be greatly out of love with a thing that hath so many faults; whosoever

OUT

- by weight cannot chuse but esteem very highly of that wherein the wit of so scrupulous adversaries hath not hitherto observed any defect, which themselves can seriously think to be of moment. Hooker, b. v. f. 27.
If ridicule were employed to laugh men out of vice and folly, it might be of some use; but it is made use of to laugh men out of virtue and good sense, by attacking every thing solemn and serious. Addison's Spectator.
14. Beyond.
Amongst those things which have been received with great reason, ought that to be reckoned which the antient practice of the church hath continued out of mind. Hooker, b. v. f. 9.
What, out of hearing gone? no sound, no word?
Alack, where are you? Shakefp.
I have been an unlawful bawd, time out of mind. Shak.
Few had the least suspicion of their intentions, till they were both out of distance to have their conversion attempted.
Clarendon, b. viii.
With a longer peace, the power of France with so great revenues, and such application, will not encrease every year out of proportion to what ours will do. Temple.
He shall only be prisoner at the soldiers quarters; and when I am out of reach, he shall be released. Dryden.
We see people lulled asleep with solid and elaborate dis-

TO OUTDO. v. a. [out and do.] To excel; to surpass; to perform beyond another.
 He hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly. Shak.
 What brave commander is not proud to see Thy brave Melantius in his gallantry?
 Our greatest ladies love to see their scorn
 Outdone by thine, in what themselves have worn. Waller.
 Heav'nly love shall outdo hellish hate,
 Giving to death, and dying to redeem,
 So dearly to redeem what hellish hate
 So easily destroy'd.
 Here let these who boast in mortal things,
 Learn how their greatest monuments of fame,
 And strength, and art, are easily outdone
 By spirits reprobate.
 An impostor outdoes the original.
 Now all the gods reward and bless my son;
 Thou hast this day thy father's youth outdone.
 I must confess the encounter of that day
 Warm'd me indeed, but quite another way;
 Not with the fire of youth, but generous rage,
 To see the glories of my youthful age
 So far outdone.
 The boy's mother despised for not having read a system of logick, outdoes him in it.
 I grieve to be outdone by Gay,
 In my own humorous biting way.

 outerly, an inch behind the cutters.
OUTERMOST. adj. [superlative, from outer.] Remotest from the middle.
 Try if three bells were made one within another, and air betwixt each; and the outermost bell were chimed with a hammer, how the sound would differ from a single bell.
 The outermost corpuscles of a white body, have their various little surfaces of a specular nature.
TO OUTFACE. v. a. [out and face.]
 1. To brave; to bear down by shew of magnanimity; to bear down with impudence.
 We shall have old swearing
 That they did give the rings away to men;
 But we'll outface them and out-swear them too.
 Dost thou come hither
 To outface me with leaping in her grave?
 Be buried quick with her, and so will I.
 Be fire with fire;
 Threaten the threaten; and outface the brow
 Of bragging horror.
 They betrayed some knowledge of their persons, but were outfaced.
 2. To stare down.
 We behold the sun and enjoy his light, as long as we look towards it circumspectly: we warm ourselves safely while we stand near the fire; but if we seek to outface the one, to enter into the other, we forthwith become blind or burnt.
TO OUTFAWN. v. a. [out and fawn.] To excel in fawning.
 In affairs of less import,
 That neither do us good nor hurt,
 And they receive as little by,
 Outfawn as much and out-comply.

 Bleak winter's force that made thy blossoms dry.
 The present age hath attempted perpetual motions, whose revolutions might outlast the exemplary mobility, and out-measure time itself.
 What may be hop'd,
 When not from Helicon's imagin'd spring,
 But sacred writ, we borrow what we sing?
 This with the fabrick of the world begun,
 Elder than light, and shall outlast the fun.
OUTLAW. n. s. [utlaga, Saxon.] One excluded from the benefit of the law. A blunderer; a robber; a bandit.
 An outlaw in a castle keeps.
 Gathering unto him all the scatterlings and outlaws out of the woods and mountains, he march'd forth into the English pale.
 As long as they were out of the protection of the law; so as every Englishman might kill them, how should they be other than outlaws and enemies to the crown of England?
 You may as well spread out the unfun'd heaps
 Of misers treasure by an outlaw's den,
 And

OUT

And tell me it is safe, as bid me hope
 Danger will let a helpless maiden pass.
 A drunkard is outlaws'd from all worthy and creditable converse: men abhor, leath, and despite him.
TO OUTLAW. v. a. To deprive of the benefits and protection of the law.
 I had a son
 Now outlaws'd from my blood; he fought my life.
 He that is drunken,
 Is outlaws'd by himself: all kind of ill
 Did with his liquor slide into his veins.
 Like as there are particular persons outlaws'd and proscribed by civil laws, so are there nations that are outlaws'd and proscribed by the law of nature and nations.
 All those spiritual aids are withdrawn, which should assist him to good, or fortify him against ill; and like an out-laws'd person he is exposed to all that will assault him.
OUTLAWRY. [from outlaw.] A decree by which any man is cut off from the community, and deprived of the protection of the law.
 By proscription and bills of outlawry, O'cavins, Antony, and Lepidus,

 he went.
 He doth himself in secret shrowd,
 To fly the vengeance for his outrage due.
 In that beastly fury
 He has been known to commit outrage,
 And cherish factions.
 Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
 And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd;
 My charity is outrage.
 2. This word seems to be used by Philips for mere commotion, without any ill import, contrary to the universal use of writers.
 See with what outrage from the frosty north,
 The early valiant Swede draws forth his wings
 In battailous array.
OUTRAGIOUS. adj. [outrageux, French. It should, I think, be written outrageous; but the custom seems otherwise.]
 1. Violent; furious; raging; exorbitant; tumultuous; turbulent.
 Under him they committed divers the most outrageous villanies, that a base multitude can imagine.
 As she went her tongue did walk,
 In foul reproach and terms of vile despite,
 Provoking him by her outrageous talk,
 To heap more vengeance on that wretched wight.
 They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss,
 Outragious as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild.
 When he knew his rival freed and gone,
 He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
 He frets, he fumes, he flares, he stamps the ground;
 The hollow tow'r with clamours rings around.
 2. Excessive;

OUT

2. Excessive; passing reason or decency.
My characters of Antony and Cleopatra, though they are favourable to them, have nothing of outrageous panegyric.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. Enormous; atrocious.
Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd.
Shakefp. Hen. VI.
OUTRAGEOUSLY. adv. [from outrageous.] Violently; tumultuously; furiously.
That people will have colour of employment given them, by which they will poll and spoil to outrageously, as the very enemy cannot do worse.

I Mac. xv. 41.
TO OUTROOT. v. a. [out and root.] To extirpate; to eradicate.
Pernicious discord seems Outrooted from our more than iron age;
Since none, not ev'n our kings, approach their temples
With any mark of war's destructive rage,
But sacrifice unarm'd.
Rowe's Amb. Step-Mother.
TO OUTRUN. v. a. [out and run.]
1. To leave behind in running.
By giving th' house of Lancaster leave to breathe,
It will outrun you, father, in the end.
The expedition of my violent love
Outruns the slower reason.
Shakefp. Macbeth.
We may outrun,
By violent swiftness, that which we run at.
Shakefp.
When things are come to the execution, there is no secrecy comparable to celerity, like the motion of a bullet in the air, which flieth so swift as it outruns the eye.
Bacon.
This advantage age from youth hath won,
As not to be out-riden, though outrun.
Dryden.
2. To exceed.
We outrun the present income, as not doubting to reimburse ourselves out of the profits of some future project.

but write one after another, and so the dance goes round in a circle.
Norris.
OUTSIDE. n. f. [out and side.]
1. Superficies; surface; external part.
What pity that to exquisite an outside of a head should not have one grain of sense in it.
L'Estrange.
The leathern outside, boist'rous as it was,
Gave way and bent.
Dryden.
2. Extreme part; part remote from the middle.
Hold an arrow in a flame for the space of ten pulses, and when it cometh forth, those parts which were on the outside of the flame are blacked and turned into a coal.
Bacon.
3. Superficial appearance.
You shall find his vanities forspent
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly.
Shakespeare.
The ornaments of conversation, and the outside of fashionable manners, will come in their due time.
Locke.
Created beings see nothing but our outside, and can therefore only frame a judgment of us from our exterior actions.
Addison's Spectator, N^o. 257.
4. The utmost. A barbarous use.
Two hundred load upon an acre, they reckon the outside of what is to be laid.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
5. Person; external man.
Fortune forbid, my outside have not charm'd her!
Shak.
Your outside promitteth as much as can be expected from a gentleman.
Bacon.
What admir'dst thou, what transports thee so?
An outside? fair, no doubt, and worthy well
Thy cherishing and thy love.
Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

A mountain, at whose verdant feet
A spacious plain, out-stretch'd in circuit wide Lay pleasant.
Milt. Par. Reg. b. iii.
Does Theseus burn?
And must not she with out-stretch'd arms receive him?
And with an equal ardour meet his vows?
Smith.
TO OUTSTRIP. v. a. [This word Skinner derives from out and stripen, to strip, German. I know not whether it might not have been originally out-trip, the f being afterward inserted.] To outgo; to leave behind.
If thou wilt out-strip death, go cross the seas,
And live with Richmond from the reach of hell.
Shak.
Do not smile at me, that I boast her off;
For thou shalt find, she will out-strip all praise,
And make it halt behind her.
Shakefp. Tempest.
Thou both their graces in thyself hast more
Out-strip, than they did all that went before.
B. Johnson.
My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will out-strip hers; as bullets powder before
A latter bullet may o'take, the powder being more.
Donne.
A fox may be out-witted, and a hare out-strip.
L'Estrange.
He got the start of them in point of obedience, and thereby out-strip them at length in point of knowledge.
South.
With such array Harpalice bestrode
Her Thracian couster, and out-strip'd the rapid flood.
Dryd.

OUTWALL. n. f. [out and wall.]
1. Outward part of a building.
2. Superficial appearance.
For confirmation that I am much more Than my out-wall, open this purse and take What it contains.
Shakefp. K. Lear.
OUTWARD. adj. [ut'wards, Saxon.]
1. External; opposed to inward.
If these shews be not outward, which of you
But is four Volscians?
Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Oh what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward side!
He took a low'ring leave; but who can tell
What outward hate might inward love conceal?
Dryden.
2. Extrinsec; adventitious.
Princes have their titles for their glories;
An outward honour, for an inward toil.
Shakefp.
Part in peace, and having mourn'd your sin
For outward Eden lost, find paradise within.
Dryden.

OUT

3. Foreign, not intestine.
It was intended to raise an outward war to join with some fedition within doors.
Hayward.
4. Tending to the out-parts.
The fire will force its outward way,
Or, in the prison pent, consume the prey.
Dryden.
5. [In theology.] Carnal; corporeal; not spiritual.
When the soul being inwardly moved to lift itself up by prayer, the outward man is surprized in some other posture; God will rather look to the inward motions of the mind, than to the outward form of the body.
Duppa.
OUTWARD. n. f. External form.
I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.
Shakefp. Cymbeline.
OUTWARD. adv.
1. To foreign parts. As a ship outward bound.
2. To the outer parts.
OUTWARDLY. adv. [from outward.]
1. Externally; opposed to inwardly.
That which inwardly each man should be, the church outwardly ought to testify.
Hooker, b. v. f. 6.
Grieved with disgrace, remaining in their fears:
However seeming outwardly content,
Yet th' inward touch their wounded honour bears.
Daniel.
2. In appearance not sincerely.
Many wicked men are often touched with some inward reverence for that goodness which they cannot be persuaded to practise; nay, which they outwardly seem to despise.
Sprat.
OUTWARDS. adv. Towards the out-parts.
Do not black bodies conceive heat more easily from light than those of other colours do, by reason that the light falling on them is not reflected outwards, but enters the bodies, and is often reflected and refracted within them until it be stifled and lost?
Newton's Opticks.
TO OUTWEAR. v. a. [out and wear.] To pass tediously.
By the stream, if I the night out-wear,
Thus spent already how shall nature bear
The dews descending and nocturnal air.
Pope.
TO OUTWEED. v. a. [out and weed.] To extirpate as a weed.
Wrath is a fire, and jealousy a weed;
The sparks soon quench, the springing weed out-weed.
Spens.
TO OUTWEIGH. v. a. [out and weigh.]
1. To exceed in gravity.
These instruments require so much strength for the supporting of the weight to be moved, as may be equal unto it, besides that other super-added power whereby it is out-weighed and moved.
Wilkins's Math. Mag.
2. To preponderate; to excel in value or influence.
If any think brave death out-weighs bad life,
Let him express his disposition.
Shakefp. Coriolanus.
All your care is for your prince I see,
Your truth to him out-weighs your love to me.
Dryden.
Whenever he finds the hardship of his slavery out-weighs the value of his life, it is in his power, by resisting the will of his master, to draw on himself the death he desires.
Locke.
The marriage of the clergy is attended with the poverty of some of them, which is balanced and out-weighed by many single advantages.
Atterbury.
TO OUTWELL. v. a. [out and well.] To pour out.
As when old father Nilus 'gins to swell,
With timely pride about the Egyptian vale,
His fatid waves do fertile fline out-well,
And overflow each plain and lowly dale.
Fa. Queen.
TO OUTWIT. v. a. [out and wit.] To cheat; to overcome by stratagem.
A fox may be out-witted, and a hare out-strip.
L'Estr.
The truer hearted any man is, the more liable he is to be imposed on; and then the world calls it out-witting a man, when he is only out-knaved.
L'Estrange.
Nothing is more equal in justice, and indeed more natural in the direct consequence of effects and causes, than for men wickedly wise to out-wit themselves; and for such as wrestle with providence, to trip up their own heels.
South.
After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself out-witted by Caesar and broke with him.
Dryden.
OUTWORK. n. f. [out and work.] The parts of a fortification next the enemy.
Take care of our out-work, the navy royal, which are the walls of the kingdom; and every great ship is an impregnable fort; and our many safe and commodious ports as the redoubts to secure them.
Bacon.
Death hath taken in the out-works,
And now assails the fort; I feel, I feel him
Gnawing my heart-strings.
Denham.
OUTWORN. part. [from out-wear.] Consumed or destroyed by use.
Better at home lie bed-ridden, idle,
Inglorious, unemploy'd, with age out-worn.
Milton.

OWN

To OUTWRE'ST. v. a. [out and wrest.] To extort by violence.
The growing anguish
Rankled so fore and fester'd inwardly,
Till that the truth thereof I did out-wrest. Fa. Queen.
OUTWROUGHT. part. [out and wrought.] Out-done; exceeded in efficacy.

In your violent acts,
The fall of torrents and the noise of tempests,
The boiling of Carybdis, the sea's wildness,
The eating force of flames, and wings of winds,
Be all out-wrought by your transcendent furies. B. Johns.
To OUTWORTH. v. a. [out and worth.] To excel in value.
A beggar's book

Out-worths a noble's blood. Shakefp. Hen. VIII.
To OWE. v. a. [eg aa, I owe, or I ought, Islandick.]
1. To be obliged to pay; to be indebted.

I owe you much, and, like a wife's youth,
That which I owe is lost. Shakefp. Merch. of Ven.
Let none seek needless causes to approve
The faith they owe. Milt. Par. Left, b. ix.

All your parts of pious duty done,
You owe your Ormond nothing but a son. Dryden.
Thou hast deserv'd more love than I can show,
But 'tis thy fate to give, and mine to owe. Dryden.

If, upon the general balance of trade, English merchants owe to foreigners one hundred thousand pounds, if commodities do not, our money must go out to pay it. Locke.

2. To be obliged to ascribe; to be obliged for.
By me upheld, that he may know how frail
His fall'n condition is, and to me owe

All his deliverance, and to none but me. Milton.
3. To have from any thing as the consequence of a cause.
O deem thy fall not ow'd to man's decree,
Jove hated Greece, and punish'd Greece in thee. Pope.

4. To possess; to be the right owner of. For owe, which is, in this sense, obsolete, we now use own.
Thou dost here usurp

The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thyself Upon this island as a spy. Shakefp. Tempest.
Fate, shew thy force; ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be; and be this so. Shakefp.

Not poppy nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'st yesterday. Shakefp. Othello.

If any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe

The winged wand'rer. Crashaw.
5. A practice has long prevailed among writers, to use owing, the active participle of owe, in a passive sense, for owed or due. Of this impropriety Bolton was aware, and, having no quick sense of the force of English words, has used due, in the sense of consequence or imputation, which by other writers is only used of debt. We say, the money is due to me; Bolton says, the effect is due to the cause.

6. Confidential.
This was owing to an indifference to the pleasures of life, and an aversion to the pomps of it. Atterbury.

7. Due as a debt.
You are both too bold;
I'll teach you all what's owing to your queen. Dryden.

The debt, owing from one country to the other, cannot be paid without real effects sent thither to that value. Locke.

8. Imputable to, as an agent.
If we estimate things, what in them is owing to nature, and what to labour, we shall find in most of them to be on the account of labour. Locke.

The custom of particular impeachments was not limited any more than that of struggles between nobles and commons, the ruin of Greece was owing to the former, as that of Rome was to the latter. Swift.

OWL. n. f. [ule, Saxon; bulote, French and Scottish.] A bird that flies about in the night and catches mice.
Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing

For a charm. Shakefp. Macbeth.
Return to her!
No! rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shakefp.

'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd every bay;
Sick was the fun, the owl forsook his bow'r. Dunciad.

OWLER. n. f. One who carries contraband goods. Perhaps from the necessity of carrying on an illicit trade by night.
By running goods, these graceless owlers gain. Swift.

We understand by some owlers, old people die in France.
Tatler, N^o. 56.

OWN. n. f. [agen, Saxon; egen, Dutch.]
1. This is a word of no other use than as it is added to the possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, our, your, their. It seems to be a substantive; as, my own, my peculiar: but is, in reality, the participle passive of the verb owe, in the participle own or own: my own; the thing owned by, or belonging to me.

OX

Inachus in his cave alone,
Wept not another's losses, but his own. Dryden.
2. It is added generally by way of emphasis or corroboration.
I yet never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was my own. Shakefp.

Every nation made gods of their own, and put them in high places. 2 Kings xvii. 29.
For my own share one beauty I design,
Engage your honours that she shall be mine. Dryden.

It is conceit rather than understanding, if it must be under the restraint of receiving and holding opinions by the authority of any thing but their own perceived evidence. Locke.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,
And knit these gloves made of her own spun yarn. Gay.
Passion and pride were to her soul unknown,
Convinc'd that virtue only is her own. Pope.

3. Sometimes it is added to note opposition or contradiction;
domestick; not foreign; mine, his, or yours; not another's.
These toils abroad, these tumults with his own,
Fell in the revolution of one year. Daniel.

There's nothing fillier than a crafty knave out-witted, and beaten at his own play. L'Estrange.

To OWN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To acknowledge; to avow for one's own.
When you come, find me out,
And own me for your son. Dryden's Cleomenes.

2. To possess; to claim; to hold by right.
Tell me, ye Trojans, for that name you own;
Nor is your course upon our coasts unknown. Dryden.

Others on earth o'er human race preside,
Of these the chief, the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the British throne. Pope.

3. To avow.
I'll venture out alone,
Since you, fair prince, my protection own. Dryden.

4. To confess; not to deny.
Make this truth so evident, that those who are unwilling to own it may yet be ashamed to deny it. Tillotson.

Others will own their weakness of understanding. Locke.
OWNERSHIP. n. f. [from owner.] Property; rightful possession.
In a real action, the proximate cause is the property or ownership of the thing in controversy. Ayliffe's Par.

OWNER. n. f. [from own.] One to whom any thing belongs; master; rightful possessor.
A bark

Stays but till her owner comes aboard. Shakefp.
Is it not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,
But thou wilt brave me. Shakefp.

Here shew favour, because it happeneth that the owner hath incurred the forfeiture of eight years profit of his lands, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process against him. Bacon.

They intend advantage of my labours,
With no small profit daily to my owners. Milton.
These wait the owners last despair,
And what's permitted to the flames invade. Dryden.

A freehold, though but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleas'd in the possession, and stout in the defence of it.
Addison's Freeholders, N^o. 1.

That small muscle draws the nose upwards, when it expresses the contempt which the owner of it has upon seeing any thing he does not like. Addison's Spectator.

Victory hath not made us insolent, nor have we taken advantage to gain any thing beyond the honour of restoring every one's right to their just owners. Atterbury.

What is this wit, which must our cares employ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy. Pope.
OWRE. n. f. [urus jubatus, Lat.] A beast. Ainsworth.
OX. n. f. plur. OXEN. [oxa, Saxon; oxe, Danish.]

1. The general name for black cattle.
The black ox hath not trod on his foot.
Sheep run not half so tim'rous from the wolf,
Or horse or oxen from the leopard. Shakefp.

As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves.
I saw the river Clitumnus, celebrated by the poets for making cattle white that drink of it. The inhabitants of that country have still the same opinion, and have a great many oxen of a whitish colour to confirm them in it. Addis.

2. A castrated bull.
The horns of oxen and cows are larger than the bulls;
which is caused by abundance of moisture. Bacon.

Although there be naturally more males than females, yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen and weathers, there are fewer. Grant.

- PALM*. n. f. [palma, Latin; palmier, Fr.]
1. A tree of great variety of species; of which the branches were worn in token of victory.
The palm-tree hath a single imbranched stalk; the leaves are disposed in a circular form on the top, which, when they wither or fall off, are succeeded by new ones out of the middle of those which remain; among which sheaths or plain twigs break forth, opening from the bottom to the top, very full of flowers and clusters of embryos. There are twenty-one species of this tree, of which the most remarkable are, the greater palm or date-tree. The dwarf palm grows in Spain, Portugal, and Italy, from whence the leaves are sent hither and made into flag-brooms. The oily palm is a native of Guinea and Cape Verd island, but has been transplanted to Jamaica and Barbadoes. It grows as high as the main mast of a ship. Miller.
Get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæsar.
Go forth into the mount and fetch palm-branches. Neh. viii. 15.
Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil, than the abundant growing of the palm-trees without labour of man. This tree alone giveth unto man whatsoever his life beggett at nature's hand. Raleigh.
Above others who carry away the palm for excellence, is Maurice Landgrave of Heis. Peacham of Mysick.
Fruits of palm-tree, pleasantest to thirst
And hunger both. Milton's Par. Lost.

- PANCREAS*. n. f. [παν and κρεας.] The pancreas or sweet bread, is a gland of the conglomerate sort, situated between the bottom of the stomach and the vertebrae of the loins: it lies across the abdomen, reaching from the liver to the spleen, and is strongly tied to the peritoneum, from which it receives its common membranes. It weighs commonly four or five ounces. It is about six fingers breadth long, two broad, and one thick. Its substance is a little soft and supple. Quincy.
PAN-

PAN

PANCREA'TICK, adj. [from pancreas.] Contained in the pancreas. In man and viviparous quadrupeds, the food moistened with the saliva is first chewed, then swallowed into the stomach, and so evacuated into the intestines, where being mixed with the choler and pancreatic juice, it is further subtilized, and easily finds its way in at the freight orifices of the lacteous veins. Ray on the Creation.

The bile is so acrid, that nature has furnished the pancreatic juice to temper its bitterness. Arbutnot.

PAN'CY. } n. f. [corrupted, I suppose, from panacea, panacea.] Camden.
A flower: a kind of violet.

PANSY. } The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead
For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head;
Pancies to please the fight, and cassia sweet to smell. Dryd.
The real essence of gold is as impossible for us to know, as for a blind man to tell in what flower the colour of a pansy is, or is not to be found, whilst he has no idea of the colour of a pansy. Locke.

PANDECT. n. f. [pandectæ, Latin.]

in the story of Trilus and Cressida; it was therefore originally written pandar, till its etymology was forgotten.] A pimp;
a male bawd; a procurer.
Let him with his cap in hand,
Like a bawd pander, hold the chamber door
Whilst by a slave
His fairest daughter is contaminated. Shaksp. Hen. V.
If thou fear to strike, and to make me certain it is done, thou art the pander to her dishonour, and equally to me disloyal. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
If ever you prove false to one another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be call'd panders after my name. Shaksp. Troil. and Cressida.
Camillo was his help in this, his pander,
There is a plot against my life. Shaksp. Wint. Tale.
The sons of happy Punks, the pander's heir,
Are privileged
To clap the first, and rule the theatre. Dryden.
Thou hast confest'd thyself the conscious pandar
Of that pretended passion;
A single witness infamously known,
Against two persons of unquestion'd fame. Dryden.
My obedient honesty was made
The pander to thy lust and black ambition. Rowe.

TO PAN'DER. v. a. [from the noun.] To pimp; to be subservient to lust or passion.

As you have for Olivia. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
See how the pangs of death do make him grin! Shak.
Suff'rance made
Almost each pang a death. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.
Earth trembl'd from her entrails, as again
In pangs; and nature gave a second groan. Milt. Par. Lost.
Juno pitying her disastrous fate,
Sends Iris down, her pangs to mitigate. Denham.
My fond advance
Still in new impudence, new ignorance.
Success let others teach, learn thou from me
Pangs without birth, and fruitless industry. Dryden.
I will give way
To all the pangs and fury of despair. Addison.
I saw the hoary traitor
Grin in the pangs of death, and bite the ground. Addison.
Ah! come not, write not, think not once of me,
Nor share one pang of all I felt for thee. Pope.

TO PANG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment cruelly.
If fortune divorce
It from the bearer; 'tis a suff'rance panging,
As foul and bodies parting. Shaksp.
I grieve myself
To think, when thou shalt be disfig'd by her,
Whom now thou t'rt'st on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me. Shaksp.

PAN'ICK. adj. [from pan, groundless fears being supposed to be sent by pan.] Violent without cause.
The sudden fit and panick fear, when chatecleer was carried away by reynard. Camden's Remains.

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [παρά and φράσις, Fr.] A loose interpretation; an explanation in many words.

All the laws of nations were but a paraphrase upon this standing rectitude of nature, that was ready to enlarge itself into suitable determinations, upon all emergent objects and occasions. South's Sermons.

In paraphrase, or translation with latitude, the author's words are not so strictly followed as his sense, and that too amplified, but not altered: such is Mr. Waller's translation of Virgil's fourth Æneid. Dryden.

TO PARAPHRASE. v. a. [paraphrase, Fr. παράφραζεω.] To interpret with laxity of expression; to translate loosely.

We are put to construe and paraphrase our own words, to free ourselves from the ignorance and malice of our adversaries. Stillington's Def. of Dis. on Romish Idolatry.

What needs he paraphrase on what we mean, Dryden.

We were at work but wanton; he's obscene.
Where translation is impracticable, they may paraphrase.
But it is intolerable, that under a pretence of paraphrasing and translating, a way should be suffered of treating authors to a manifest disadvantage. Fulton on the Classics.

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [paraphrase, Fr. παράφρασις.] A lax interpreter; one who explains in many words.

The fittest for public audience are such, as following a middle course between the rigor of literal translators and the liberty of paraphrasis, do, with great shortness and plainness, deliver the meaning. Hooker.

The chaldean paraphrase renders Gerah by Meath. Arbut.

PARAPHRASICAL. adj. [from paraphrase.] Lax in interpretation; not literal; not verbal.

PARAPHRASIS. n. f. [παρά and φράσις, Fr.]

PARAPHRENTIS. n. f. [παράφρεντις, Fr.]

PARASANG. n. f. [parasang, low Latin.] A Persian measure of length.

Since the mind is not able to frame an idea of any space without parts, instead thereof it makes use of the common measures, which, by familiar use, in each country, have imprinted themselves on the memory; as inches and feet, or cubits and parasangs. Locke.

PARASITE. n. f. [parasite, Fr. parasite, Latin.] One that frequents rich tables, and earns his welcome by flattery.

He is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hopes linger. Shakespeare.

Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites,
Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears,
You fools of fortune. Shakespeare.

Come, you parasite, answer me Directly to this question. Shakespeare.

Diogenes, when mice came about him, as he was eating, said, I see, that even Diogenes nourisheth parasites. Bacon.

Thou, with trembling fear,
Or like a fawning parasite, obeyed;
Then to thyself ascrib'd the truth foretold.
The people sweat not for their king's delight,
To enrich a pimp, or raise a parasite. Milton.

PARASITICAL. adj. [parasitique, Fr. from parasite.] Flat-tering; wheedling.

The bishop received small thanks for his parasitical presentation. Hakewill on Providence.

Some parasitical preachers have dared to call those martyrs, who died fighting against me. King Charles.

Her filthy parbreak all the place defiled has. Fa. Queen.

PARCEL. n. f. parcella, French; particula, Latin.]

1. A small bundle.

2. A part of the whole taken separately.

Women, Silvius, had they mark'd him
In parcels, as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him. Shakespeare.

I drew from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate;
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively. Shakespeare's Othello.

An inventory thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Shakespeare.

Rich stuffs and ornaments of household.
I have known pensions given to particular persons, any one of which, if divided into smaller parcels, and distributed to those, who distinguish themselves by wit or learning, would answer the end. Swift.

The flame experiments succeed on two parcels of the white of an egg, only it grows somewhat thicker upon mixing with an acid. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. A quantity or mass.

What can be rationally conceived in so transparent a substance as water for the production of these colours, besides the various sizes of its fluid and globular parcels. Newton.

This youthful parcel
Of noble batchelors stand at my bestowing. Shakespeare.

5. Any

PAR

5. Any number or quantity in contempt.

They came to this conclusion; that, unless they could, by a parcel of fair words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. L'Estrange.

TO PARCEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out several perfections to several deities, do they not, by this, assert contradictions, making deity only to such a measure perfect; whereas a deity implies perfection beyond all measure. South's Sermons.

Those ghostly kings would parcel out my pow'r,
And all the fatness of my land devour. Dryden.

2. To make up into a mass.

What a wounding shame,
That mine own servant should Parcel the sum of my disgraces by Addition of his envy! Shakespeare.

PARCENER. n. f. [In common law.] When one dies possessed of an estate, and having issue only daughters, or his sisters be his heirs; so that the lands descend to those daughters or sisters: these are called parceners, and are but as one heir. Di.

PARCENERY. n. f. [from parcener, French.] A holding or occupying of land by more persons pro indiviso, or by joint tenants, otherwise called coparceners: for if they refuse to divide their common inheritance, and chuse rather to hold it jointly, they are said to hold in parcenary. Cowell.

TO PARCHE. v. a. [from parcher, Fr.]

Those who seem to be satisfied with their conjecture: perhaps from parchus, burnt, to parch, to parch; perhaps from parchement, the effect of fire upon parchment being almost proverbial.] To burn slightly and superficially; to scorch; to dry up.

Hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall. Shakespeare.

Did he so often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milt. Par. Lost.

I'm stupify'd with sorrow, past relief
Of tears; parch'd up and wither'd with my grief. Dryd.

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemisphere would be condemned to perpetual cold and darkness, the other continually roasted and parched by the sun beams. Ray.

The Syrian star
With his sultry breath infects the sky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heav'ns above us fry. Dryden's Horace.

Full fifty years
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the fever heats of parching summer. Rowe.

He is like a man distressed with thirst in the parched places of the wilderness, he searches every pit, but finds no water. Rogers's Sermons.

TO PARCHE. v. n. To be scorched.

We were better parch'd in Affric sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes. Shakespeare.

If to prevent the acrospiring, it be thrown thin, many corns will dry and parch into barley. Mort. Husb.

PARCHMENT. n. f. [parchemin, French; pergamena, Latin.]

Skins dressed for the writer. Among traders, the skins of sheep are called parchment, those of calves vellum.

Is not this a lamentable thing, that the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment; that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

In the coffin, that had the books, they were found as fresh as if newly written, being written in parchment, and covered with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Like flying shades before the clouds we shew,
We shrink like parchment in consuming flame. Dryden.

 Women could not live in that parity and equality of expence with their husbands, as now they do. Graunt.
 By an exact parity of reason, we may argue, if a man has no sense of those kindnesses that pass upon him, from one like himself, whom he sees and knows, how much less shall his heart be affected with the grateful sense of his favours, whom he converses with only by imperfect speculations, by the discourses of reason, or the discoveries of faith. South's Sermons.
 By parity of reason, we must expect a peace so much worse about two years hence. Swift's Miscellanies.
PARK. n. f. [peagme, Sax. para, Fr.] A piece of ground inclosed and stored with wild beasts of chase, which a man may have by prescription or the king's grant. Manwood, in his forest-laws, defines it thus: a park is a place for privilege for wild beasts of venery, and also for other wild beasts, that are beasts of the forest and of the chase: and those wild beasts are to have a firm peace and protection there, so that no man may hurt or chase them within the park, without license of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chase or a warren; for a park must be inclosed, and may not lie open; if it does, it is a good cause of seizure into the king's hands: and the owner cannot have action against such as hunt in his park, if it lies open.
 We have parks and inclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds, which we use not only for view or rareness, but like wife for dilections and trials. To PARK.

PAR

To PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose as in a park.
 How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?

PARKER. n. f. [from park.] A park-keeper. Ansforth.
PARKLEAVES. n. f. An herb. Ansforth.
PARLE. n. f. [from parler, French.] Conversation; talk; oral treaty; oral discussion of any thing.
 Of all the gentlemen,
 That every day with parle encounter me,
 In thy opinion, which is worthiest love,
 Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. Shakeſp.
 The bishop, by a parle, is, with a show
 Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.
 Why meet we thus like wrangling advocates,
 To urge the justice of our cause with words?
 I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we must meet,
 Give me my arms. Rowe's Ambitious Step-mother.
 To PARLEY. v. n. [from parler, French.] To treat by word of mouth; to talk; to discuss any thing orally. It is much used in war, for a meeting of enemies to talk.
 A Turk desired the captain to send some, with whom they might more conveniently parley. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
 He parleys with her a while, as imagining she would advise him to proceed. Broome.
PARLEY. n. f. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; discussion by word of mouth.
 Seek rather by parley, to recover them than by the sword. Sid.
 Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley:
 A rotten case abides no handling. Shakeſp.
 In such a parley should I answer thee. Shakeſp.
 Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shakeſp.
 Let us resolve never to have any parley with our lusts, but to make some considerable progress in our repentance. Calamy.
 No gentle means could be essay'd;
 'Twas beyond parley when the siege was laid.
 Force, never yet a generous heart did gain;
 We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain. Dryden.
 Yet when some better fated youth

 Reflect one moment on his truth,
 Who dying thus, perishes to love thee. Prior.
PARLIAMENT. n. f. [parliamentum, low Lat. parlement, Fr.] In England, is the assembly of the king and three estates of the realm; namely, the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the common wealth, especially the making and correcting of laws; which assembly or court is, of all others, the highest, and of greatest authority. Cowel.
 The king is fled to London,
 To call a present court of parliament. Shakeſp.
 Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,
 To make a shambles of the parliament house. Shakeſp.
 The true use of parliaments is very excellent; and be often called, and continued as long as is necessary. Bacon.
 I thought the right way of parliaments, the most safe for my crown, as best pleasing to my people. King Charles.
 These are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial stood for parliament-men, we know who would carry it. Dryden.
PARLIAMENTARY. adj. [from parliament.] Enacted by parliament; suiting the parliament; pertaining to parliament.
 To the three first titles of the two houses, or lines, and conquest, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal.
 Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or constitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons.
 Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary security; I think to be dangerous and illegal. Swift.
